Wood Freed as Captor Falls Wounded After Killing a Policeman

Under Care of Physician W. F. Wood Claims He Was Tortured by Kidnapers — Woman Wounded in Shooting—Captive Four Days.

San Francisco, Aug. 26 (AP)—Freed from a kidnaper who fell dying in a blaze of gun fire after fatally wounding an officer in a crowded public market, William F. Wood, 15, a cousin of the late William Howard Taft, was under care of physicians today.

Wood, who said he had been held captive four days, tortured and forced to walk the streets in silence while arranging for his own ransom, was reported near collapse.

Bank books, securities and cash aggregating $10,000 which Wood asserted he had been forced to turn over to his abductor, were found in the latter's pockets.

Wood's release came with dramatic suddenness yesterday in the market, where his kidnaper had taken him "to buy some walnuts". The sight of a policeman nerved Wood to cry for help.

Responding to the cry, Patrolman Michael McDonald, 54, received three bullets in his body from the kidnapers' pistol and fell mortally wounded. He died several hours later.

The kidnaper, identified as Howard Stafford Meek, 30, alias Henry Jennings, a former ferryboat ticket taker, was shot down by the other officers as he fled along a street outside the market.

Mrs. Ella Bowers, 62, passing by on her way to court to get a divorce, was struck in the arm by a stray bullet.

Wood, a retired business man, took refuge in a grocery department of the market as the shooting started. He was at first taken into custody as a suspected confederate of the slain man but quickly explained his identity.

Wood displayed lacerated wrists caused he said by the wire with which his hands were bound at times during his captivity. His body was bruised from beatings he said he had received.

Two Children Burned To Death At Hudson

Hudson, N. Y., Aug 26 (AP).—Two children were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the restaurant and second story home of Thomas Cruice here today. Cruice and four other children escaped.

The dead were:

Thomas Cruice, 18, and Rosie, 6.

The children who escaped were Sebastian, 4, Anthony, 5, William, 11, and Antoinette, 15.

Mrs. Cruice died three months ago and since then Antoinette has kept house for her father and the other children. She struggled to drag Rosie from the flaming frame structure until almost overcome. The girl staggered to a window and jumped to safety.

Thomas ran out of the building but finding that Rosie still was unaccounted for re-entered. He was overcome. Both of the children's bodies were badly burned.

Cruice's restaurant is at 13 North Second street. Above it was his five room home. Two bedrooms opened into the kitchen. While all seven members of the family were sleeping a neighbor saw flames coming from a kitchen window. The shout of "fire" awakened Antoinette. The house was filled with smoke and the kitchen was enveloped in flames.

The girl aroused all the family except Rosie who apparently was sleeping more soundly than the others. It was a sleep of death as the child has been overcome with smoke.

Cruice, carrying Sebastian and Anthony, and Thomas dragging William, ran down the stairs. Antoinette implored them to hurry, shouting an assurance that she would bring Rosie. As she attempted to drag the unconscious child from her bed Antoinette collapsed, she dragged herself to a living room window and jumped.

By the time firemen arrived the interior was cut off by a wall of flame. Gordon Pietrie, first assistant chief, and three police patrolman, Finch, Sullivan and Finck attempted to fight their way into the second floor but were driven back.

Defective wiring was believed to have caused the fire.

Central Trades to Meet on Monday

In conjunction with the NRA activities an open meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Council will be held in the common council chambers in the city hall Monday evening at 8 o'clock. All delegates and former delegates, members of the crafts, factory workers, clerks and others, organized or unorganized, employed or unemployed, are urged to attend the meeting, which will be addressed by speakers from the NRA headquarters.

Petit Larceny Charge.

Frederick Mack, 17, of New Paltz, was held at the Ulster county jail over night to await a hearing today before Justice L. C. Barnes on a charge of petit larceny.

August 31 Last Day To Sign Agreement of President

The following appeal was issued today from the Kingston headquarters of the National Recovery Administration:

TO EMPLOYERS:

The NRA plan is re-employing millions by shortening the hours of all workers in every occupation, except agricultural and domestic service.

In addition, the NRA calls upon employers to pay at least living wages so that workers will be able to maintain a decent American standard, even with a shorter work week.

Every industry before long will be covered by its own code which fits conditions in that particular industry. UNTIL THAT TIME ALL EMPLOYERS ARE ASKED TO SIGN THE PRESIDENT'S AGREEMENT AND TO MEET THE HOURS AND WAGES ESTABLISHED IN THAT AGREEMENT, WHICH IS ALSO CALLED THE BLANKET CODE.

The success of the NRA plan depends upon the cooperation of every employer and consumer.

More people at work, with bigger payrolls will increase the market for your goods. Every dollar spent by an employer now will return again a hundred fold as business flows in from a consuming public which is once more able to buy and which has great unfilled needs.

SIGN THE PRESIDENT'S AGREEMENT NOW. Blanks for this purpose and full explanation to meet individual employers' problems will be supplied by NRA headquarters at the Y. M. C. A., phone 1100. Remember August 31st is the last day to sign this agreement.

Two Barbershops Battered by Bricks

Edward Bradley's Shop Had Two Bricks Hurled Through Window—Genther's Shop Had Two Windows and Glass in Door Smashed During Night.

What the police believe is an outbreak of hoodlumism against local barbers resulted in two shops being attacked with bricks during the night. Edward Bradley's shop at 110 Broadway had two bricks hurled through the large plate glass window, and at Genther's shop at 444 Washington avenue two windows were broken and a glass in the entrance door smashed. Both acts of hoodlumism were reported to the police department.

Mr. Bradley, who has only recently opened his barber ship in the new building on Broadway, opposite the Orpheum Theatre, told the police he believed the attack on his shop was due to the fact that he had refused to place in operation the higher scale of wages. The building he occupies is owned by Mrs. Adele Bregman.

One of the bricks passed directly through the big plate glass window and struck a wall in an adjoining room. Mr. Bradley who occupies the rooms in the rear of his shop, was awakened shortly after midnight by the crash of breaking glass. The hoodlum, however, disappeared before he could be caught.

Mr. Genther told the police this morning that he saw no reason for his shop being wrecked as he had recently signed the NRA agreement and had also placed in effect the higher code of prices adopted by the majority of the barbers of the city.

Mr. Genther said he had been told that the attack on his shop had occurred about 3 o'clock this morning and that after the windows had been smashed an auto had driven away from in front of the shop.

Four Negroes Face Judge de la Vergne

Friday the police picked up four negroes on South Prospect street. One of the negroes, Thomas Wynn, of Port Ewen, was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct in loitering about the street without any visible means of support. The three other negroes, all strangers, gave their names of Joseph Brown, Charles White and Frank Williams.

All four were arraigned before Judge Charles de la Vergne in police court this morning. Wynn was fined $5 for public intoxication. The three other negroes were given an opportunity to leave town. The three told the judge that they had been chased off a passenger train and were walking along the street when arrested. The police said they were headed for the hobo camp along the West Shore Railroad tracks near the Wilbur tunnel.

Cyril E. Burke, 35, of the Bowery, New York city, who told Judge Culloton on Friday that he was a lawyer, changed his mind after having his hearing adjourned to Monday, and pleaded guilty to public intoxication. He was given ten days in the county jail.

HOME OWNERS MAY SEEK AID THROUGH N. Y. OFFICE

Home owners, whose properties are about to be affected by foreclosures, and who wish to make application to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, may do so by addressing Vincent Dailey, state manager, at the Empire State Building, New York city.

All applications are receiving every possible attention, say notices from Mr. Dailey's office, but pending the completion of the organization in the various districts, priority is being given to applications involving actual foreclosures on which the date of sale has already been advertised.

Vagrancy Charged.

Terry Holmes, 33, who gave his residence as southeast California, was committed to the county jail Friday by Justice Mooney of Eddyville, the charge being vagrancy.

Bank Committee to Meet Examiners in New York on Monday

Plans Begun To Formulate New Banking House and Transfer Certain Assets From Old Bank to New Institution.

In line with "Plan of Reorganization and Notice" sent out by Conservator Willis G. Nash July 31, 1933, to all stockholders, depositors and other creditors of the National Ulster County Bank and Trust Company of Kingston, a meeting will be held in New York Monday with the federal bank examiners. Representatives of the depositors' committee, trustees and the conservator will be present.

Under the plan officially approved by Washington July 19, a 25 per cent waiver of claims by unsecured depositors was necessary. To become effective 75 per cent in amount of unsecured depositors must waive. As already announced in The Freeman this has been accomplished with a surplus of waivers.

The next step is the creation of a new bank and the transferring of certain of the assets of the old bank to the trustees for the benefit of all the unsecured depositors and other creditors.

All assets transferred must be checked by bank examiners and each unsecured depositor and creditor will receive a participation certificate. Over 6,000 such certificates must be issued. Each one must be mathematically checked and sent out with the approval of the government.

The meeting Monday is to set up the machinery under government supervision to do one of the biggest detail tasks ever undertaken in Ulster county.

World Wheat Pact Signed by Nations

London, Aug. 26 (AP).—An international agreement designed to balance the supply and demand of wheat and to stabilize its price at a higher level was hailed today as a salvage from the wrecked World Economic conference.

Twenty-one nations signed the pact, under which 63.08 United States cents in gold (currently 89 cents) a bushel was set as the price of wheat for four months, whereupon importing countries will lower tariffs.

Comment in London newspapers was generally enthusiastic. "The whole agreement may be regarded as the first instalment of the program for economic recovery which the World Economic Conference was convened to frame," said the Times. Other newspapers called it "advantageous," "worthwhile," and "auspicious."

Frederick E. Murphy, American representative at the conference of representatives of 31 countries, said, "We feel certain we have made the greatest single move which could be achieved for the restoration of world prosperity."

Argentina's representative, Tomas A. Lebreton, was not present at the meeting last night when the signatures were affixed, but on Monday he will add his name to the list which includes the other major wheat exporters, the United States, Australia and Canada.

Many Entering Floats In Huge NRA Parade To Be Held August 31

Promises to be Largest Marching Affair Ever Held in Kingston—Twenty Floats, Many Organizations and Shops Already Signed to March.

The NRA parade to be held in this city on Thursday afternoon, August 31st promises to be one of the largest ever held in this city. Last evening at a meeting of the parade committee in the office of the mayor the committe assisting Chairman Ernest Smith reported very encouraging news.

Float Chairman Morris Sampter is receiving a splendid response from Kingston merchants, industries and dealers. Floats additional to those already announced included Kingston Auto Dealers, the Village of Connelly, Charchian Shirt Company, A. R. Newcombe Oil, Inc., Vanderlyn Battery Company, Clark Radio Shop, The City of Kingston. Mr. Sampter said about 20 floats were already assured.

One of the features of the parade will be the float of the Board of Aldermen on which the Aldermen will ride. Acting Mayor Heiselman announced that all municipal employes would march headed by the Board of Public Works. Fire Chief Joseph Murphy, who is also Marshal of the NRA parade also informed the meeting a large number of firemen would march in their colorful garb. The Chief promised that the parade would be an orderly one and again requested all individuals or groups who are to participate to communicate with him that they may be definitely placed in the line of march.

Sam Jacobson was selected to communicate with the various Kingston industries, shops and other groups or workers to ascertain how many would take part in the parade. Already a dozen groups have expressed their desire to participate.

James Dugan of the Central Trades and Labor Council said that organized labor of this community would turn out in large numbers. Commander Eugene Cornwell of the American Legion expects a large contingent of Veterans to march in this "onslaught on depression". The parade shall not be without its novelties and a special subcommittee headed by Joe Kelly and Zeke Boss are planning some mirth provokers which shall be real treats.

The committee again calls to the attention that inquiries regarding float designs and general information may be secured at the Y. M. C. A. headquarters daily after 10:30 a. m.

744 Have Signed NRA Agreement In City

The total number of certificates of compliance with the President's re-employment agreement filed with Postmaster Edward L. Merritt this week up until noon today, was 209, making a total filed at the central post office and stations since the first of August of 744. A few of these are amended certificates so that the total number of employers is well over 700 in number.

Some of the NRA supplies to be given employers have been exhausted but will be supplied when received. The demand for NRA insignias is much greater than was anticipated and requisitions made 10 days ago have not yet been filled. Other post offices are having the same experience as the Kingston post office according to telephone requests received by the Kingston post office for supplies.

WIFE FAINTS AT GRAVE OF AVENGER'S VICTIM

The Newburgh News of Friday says:

Funeral services for Vito Drago, slain betrayer of three small Brooklyn children, were conducted this morning at the funeral parlors of D. A. Coloni of 58 Benkard avenue, during which his widow, Mrs. Carrie Drago became hysterical and had to be attended by the victim's brother, Joseph Drago, and relatives.

At the grave in Calvary Cemetery, Mrs. Drago collapsed after a scream as her husband's body was lowered into its pauper's grave. Her three small children, frightened, clung to the skirts of aunts while adults sought to revive Mrs. Drago.

Mrs. Drago and her children were to return to their Brooklyn home at 2:50 on the Hudson River Dayline.

Mrs. Ganino Arrives.

Meanwhile, J. Vincent Amen, retained as counsel for Salvatore Ganino, the avenger, was to meet Mrs. Ganino shortly before noon and then escort her to the Newburgh Court House Jail to meet her husband.

Ganino, it was learned today, is ill in his cell and Dr. James C. Donovan, jail physician, has been called to attend him. Jailer Robert Hyndman last night administered a physic to the exhausted prisoner, but this morning, the honor slayer, near collapse pleaded for medical attention.

The man's nerves are shattered and he is believed to be suffering from lack of food and exposure he experienced three days before he murdered Drago near the Middle Hope Farm of Mrs. Virginia Romeo.

Large Crowd Attends Closing Events at Ulster County Fair

Much Interest Displayed by Spectators in Horse Show—Alton Roosa Wins Horseshoe Pitching Contest.

Good weather brought an interested crowd out for the continuation of the horse show, held at the new armory Friday afternoon, the closing day of the Ulster county fair.

The fine grays from the Beatty farm on Hurley avenue captured the honors in the draft class for four horses and three horses. In the class for pairs, horses 2,800 pounds or over, the Beatty entry and that of Roy Denniston of Wallkill tied for first place. Maple Lane Farm took second for teams, John Schoonmaker of Accord winning third and the F. B. Matthews & Co. entry fourth.

There was much interest in the competitive drill between four horse teams entered by Troop G of Troy and the Wallkill prison. The judges awarded first place and the trophy to the Wallkill entry, with Troop G second.

Kenneth E. Archer, whose horses carried off the honors on Thursday, including that of champion saddle horse of the show, took first and third in the harness class Friday. His Ocean Breeze took first, second being awarded to the entry of Dr. Leo Palmer, superintendent of the Wallkill prison. Archer's King Kong took third and fourth place went to Irving Smith.

In the class for harness horses under 14.2, A. H. Chambers' Masterpiece took first, second going to Grant, owned by Elizabeth G. Chambers.

Miss Emily G. Chambers won the class for harness Shetland ponies.

The horseshoe pitching contest for the championship of Ulster county, held Friday afternoon, brought out twelve entries. Blame Alcohol War For Gang Shooting

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 26 (AP).—An alcohol war today was blamed by police for the gang shooting last night in which two men were killed and two pedestrians wounded by stray bullets.

The men killed, James (Big Jim) Callea, 38, and his brother, Samuel, 36, were shot down as they approached a drinkery at Connecticut and 14th street, said to have been operated by them. Witnesses said both were wounded in the first volley of rifle and revolver fire but ran down the street with one of their assailants chasing them and firing at them as they ran. As "Big Jim" reached a street corner a man stepped out of a sedan and fired a volley at him with a rifle, witnesses said.

The pedestrians, June Bauder, 14-year-old high school student, and Joseph Pariso, 41, were wounded by the rifle fire.

Deputy Police Commissioner William R. Connolly today said he had uncovered evidence showing that the Callea brothers were two of the largest alcohol distillery operators in western and central New York and the killers were "brought to Buffalo for the explicit purpose of putting them on the spot."

Three men were picked up for questioning this morning but no charges have been placed against them. They are Joseph Filippo, 51, Charles Manguso, 51, bartender where the shooting started, and Joseph Bonvissuto, 35, owner of the automobile in which the younger Callea was found.

Word has been received by officials of the church that the Rev. W. P. Kemper, rector of St. John's Church, will return to Kingston about September 15 to resume his duties. Repair Highways Temporarily As Tales of Heroism and Valor Continue From Flood Sections

Kingston-Phoenicia Road Opened by Temporary Repairs Friday Evening—Mt. Tremper-Mt. Pleasant Bridge Span Out—Rustic Tavern Scene of Interest—Mountain Valleys Bore Brunt of Flood Waters—Light Wires Down.

State and county highway men were busy Friday making temporary repairs and clearing blocked highways in the mountain sections where floods on Thursday did considerable damage to pavements and bridges when the Esopus and its tributaries went on a rampage after several days of rain.

The main Kingston-Phoenicia road which was blocked in several places from Cold Brook to Phoenicia was cleared and traffic was resumed over the entire length by late afternoon. The last place to halt traffic was at Boiceville where a section of highway about 50 feet was completely washed away near the Cold Brook House just beyond Burt Winne's Garage. This fill was completed and traffic was resumed about 4 o'clock. The bus lines operating over that route were again running on scheduled routes last evening.

The first evidence of flood damage traveling west was at that place where several hundred feet of guard railing along the Esopus was carried out. It was at this point that traffic was halted during the period of high water and many who were compelled to travel used the road over the hill connecting with the Wittenberg road and again joining the main road at Mt. Tremper. This road, a gravel road, was washed out in several places but traffic was maintained. Just beyond the bend in the creek at the Winne garage, along the Harry Bailey flats the first severe washout was encountered. A considerable amount of fill was needed to put in a temporary road and one way traffic was being maintained last night.

It was just below this washout that the Carleton Bramer house is located. Mr. Bramer, a driver for Mr. Bailey, had removed his family on one of the milk trucks as the water began to come up and they took refuge at the Randall House at Mt. Tremper. For several hours telephone conections were cut off and it was feared that the Bramer family was still marooned in the house. From the Boiceville side of the washout it was impossible to tell whether the family had been safely removed from the house. Later word was received of their whereabouts.

At the lower end of Mt. Tremper the water swirled around below George Byron's house and rushed into the Mt. Tremper garage doing some damage but the most damage was done below that point. Louis Lane's garage suffered severe damage. The garage building was moved from its foundation and flooded with several feet of water. Gasoline pumps in front of the garage were torn from their fastenings and carried down stream. Mr. Lane the day previous to the flood had filled his tanks with many hundred gallons of gas.

Houses Flooded.

Several houses along the road below the Byron property, which is located on an elevation, were flooded. John Steiger, a young man living in one of the houses nearly lost his life when he attempted to swim through the water for aid to rescue his mother and other members of the family marooned in the house. Earlier in the day notice had been sent for them to abandon their home but it was not believed that the water would reach such high stages at it subsequently did. As the water came higher about the place young Steiger started for aid. He is a powerful swimmer but the current was too strong. Repeatedly he seized on trees and posts to aid himself but his grasp was torn loose and the swirling waters washed over his head as he hung on for a time. Sergeant Cunningham and several residents aided in the rescue and Steiger was finally brought to safety.

At this point the shoulders on both sides of the road are washed away and barriers have been placed along to guide traffic until repairs can be made.

The Mt. Tremper span of the Mt. Tremper-Mt. Pleasant bridge is out. This is a two span iron bridge 235 feet long which has survived many a flood on the Esopus but Thursday's rain was too much for the structure, weakened by former floods. The span on the Mt. Pleasant side still remains in place but the people on the Mt. Pleasant side will have to use the back road on the west side of the creek to Phoenicia for some time. This road was damaged but detours through fields made it possible for the people to get out after the water had subsided. At the Every farm house below Every's Mountain Breeze House there was difficulty in getting out when the flood struck. Many cottages and farm houses at Mt. Pleasant were submerged and damaged by the water.

At Elm Lunch beyond Mt. Tremper village the water was a foot deep in the lunch room and the parking space in front of the place was washed away but the foundation of the lunch room held and the building was not damaged. Repairs were already under way on Friday by the Messrs. Hoffman assisted by C. Augustus Raschke, local letter carrier, who turned rescue worker for the time.

At several points between Mt. Tremper and Phoenicia large rocks and stumps slid over the road and one way traffic was maintained. Sections of the road embankment were undermined and barriers were erected.

A large number of people journeyed to Rustic Tavern where the heroic rescue of two women and three children had been accomplished Thursday afternoon by local firemen, members of the Central Hudson force and Poughkeepsie firemen who were sent to the scene with a life-line gun. The small toilet where for hours the five people had been marooned was pointed out to passers-by as the haven which had saved five lives. Everyone in the vicinity has nothing but praise for the men who laid the bridge of ladders through the trees and finally were able to reach the stranded people and pick up the life-line which had been shot over by the Poughkeepsie firemen. The firemen and Central Hudson men who risked their lives to cross this frail bridge waded in water waist deep to reach the line when it was shot over to them. To this line a steel cable was attached and over that the rescue was made.

Loud in Praise.

Chief Joseph L. Murphy was loud in his praise for the men who did the job under his direction and also for the work which the Poughkeepsie firemen did.

It was during the attempt to rescue the five people that Father James A. Healy lost his life when a pontoon on which he and another man had attempted to cross the raging stream capsized. The tiny toilet in which the people had taken refuge was on the highest spot on the spot of land and was so surrounded by trees that it was impossible to shoot the line over to where the women could reach it and it was with much difficulty and at great risk that the men who finally crossed the bridge of ladders were able to secure the line and make it fast.

The rescue of the women and the work of constructing the bridge of ladders was photographed by news reel men who rushed to the scene when it was learned that conditions were serious. These films will later be released in news reels.

The Big Indian Valley and Woodland Valley received the full force of the flood and damages were very severe with bridges out and people marooned.

Below Shady the Sawkill went on a rampage too and a section of the state highway near the steel bridge some distance beyond Bearsville was undermined and dropped down. The road was flooded for some distance and travel was dangerous with many cars detouring over Byrdcliff mountain. Friday the Shady road was being used and traffic was maintained over the rough spot.

Willow valley was flooded and between Willow and Mt. Tremper the Beaverkill tore away embankments and undermined the road for hundreds of yards. One slide near Ideal Park was being cleared away Friday and traffic was maintained. This road is in good condition with some dangerous spots along the creek edge at places which have been marked with barriers.

Many people visited the scene on Friday to lok over the damage done.

Electric light service from Cold Brook up was still out Friday night due to many poles being down between Phoenicia and Mt. Pleasant where the line follows the creek.

It will be some time before the debris is cleared away and things again become normal along the Esopus valley.

Free Diphtheria Clinic on Monday

Another in the series of free diphtheria clinics will be held Monday afternoon from 3 to 4 o'clock in the rooms of the board of health at the city hall. Dr. L. E. Sanford will be in charge of the clinic in September when the schools reopen after the summer vacation there will be a number of children attending school for the first time and Dr. Sanford believes it would be a wise move on the part of parents to have their children immunized from diphtheria by attending the clinic.

Auto and Truck Crash.

The Plymouth car of Miss Hilda B. Parker of 162 Wall street was badly damaged Friday afternoon when it was in collision with a truck driven by Herman Leusenring of R. D. 1, Kingston. The collision occurred at the intersection of Wall and St. James streets and Miss Parker's car had two fenders and the running board smashed in addition to damage to the side of the car.

Some of the big industries seem to be asking for General Johnson to take 'em by the scruff of the neck and ram codes down their throats.

Men at Pine Camp Report Good Time

Pine Camp, N. Y., Aug. 24, 1933. With Battery A at Pine Camp:

Now that the boys have got three or four days of Pine Camp weather and grub under their belts, they are ready for anything that might appear.

First, let we tell you about the grub. The grub this year is about the best we have ever had up here. We have had some pretty wonderful meals prepared by Jim Lyons, our cook.

Second, the boys are proving very efficient in their gun drills and firing as well as in handling the horses.

Third, the boys may not have much money but they sure are having a good time. We have movies here three times a week and boxing bouts and wrestling matches twice a week. These are all free.

The camp is pretty well crowded this year there being here besides the 156th, the 106th, the 102nd Squadron of 27th Div. Aviation and 52nd F. A. Brigade Headquarters as well.

On Wednesday, August 23, the non-commissioned officers of the 156th N. C. O. Association held their annual banquet at Alexandria Bay in the Thousand Island House, all the non-commissioned officers of Battery A attending.

Private "Bill" Krom, our range guard, finds sitting down very uncomfortable since he has taken to horseback riding, although "Bill" has not as yet tried imitating the Prince of Wales. "Bill" also says he doesn't like to stand guard over dead cows.

Private "Van" Benjamin wanted to get on K. P., but after seeing all the dishes he had to wash he didn't like it so well. Van also says the reason we didn't have ice cream for supper last night was because the "missionary" brought it too late.

Private Ralph Scism, our second cook, finds it very hard getting up early in the morning.

The other morning while waiting for our supplies, Jim Lyons sent Corp Blake over to the General to get him to hurry the supplies along as he wanted them for dinner. To show what a drag the Corp. has with the General the supplies were there when he got back.

Private Beans Van Etten brought a radio to camp with him, but finds he can't sleep and listen to the radio at the same time, so he shuts the radio off.

There was a review of the regiment handled solely by non-commissioned officers scheduled for today, August 24, but it rained here all day, so I suppose it will be held Friday instead. The writer is very anxious to see the review as he believes it will be very interesting.

Flashes of Life Sketched in Brief

(By The Associated Press)

Chicago—A historic race between a horse drawn railway coach and "Thom Thumb" granddaddy of all American locomotives, was re-run yesterday on Illinois Central tracks near the World's Fair.

The "Thom Thumb" built by Peter Cooper as the first locomotive constructed in this country, tooted as exactly as it did in the original race 1 3 years ago. Just as on that occasion when everything was going fine for it, however, a fan belt broke and the horse drawn "Pioneer", also a participant in the first race, flashed by—a winner.

A Boy and Some Buttons.

New York—A small boy, wandering around the Corn Exchange Bank while his father was making a deposit, saw a row of buttons on the manager's desk yesterday. He started playing them like the keys of a piano.

The stenographer bustled in with her writing pad; the cashier brought his day's tabulations; the doorman reached for his gun, and police dashed to the bank.

Bradford, Pa. — The murder mystery is solved. Someone called the police station and said human bones had been found in an incinerator.

Police found the bones, but discovered they comprised a skeleton owned by a doctor who died. His widow tired of seeing them about the house, had sent them away to be burned.

A Battle to the Finish.

Middleburg, N. Y.—Clarence Winnans and Earl Cain shot a woodchuck, put it in the car and started homeward. The chuck revived, proved too much for Winans to handle alone and Cain joined the fight. Driverless the car crossed the road, ripped off three concrete posts, a wheel and fender. The chuck was subdued.

Winans and Cain are going fishing today.

Car Stolen While He's Buried

Chicago—Jack Loreen for some reason or other recently sought to set a world's record for living in a coffin underground. After two months of it he emerged yesterday from his "grave" to discover his automobile, which had been parked nearby, stolen. Next time he says he'll bury his auto too.

University Players Close Season Monday

The Elverhoj Theatre will close for the summer season on Monday evening when the University Players offer "Meet the Wife", a play that was given by this same group earlier in the season, and which is being repeated as a closing vehicle by popular request.

This will be the final appearance of this young group of actors, and to make the offering specially attractive, the price of tickets has been reduced to half price.

A capacity audience is expected to be on hand to bid farewell to the University Players, who have established an enviable reputation in this section, and who have made a great many friends.

The starting time of the show will be 9 o'clock.

PUNISHMENT

No whipping, no nursing . . . just a soft word, and your Terraplane will go through fire and water for you!

That's TERRAPLANING!

By letter, by wire, by word-of-mouth, Essex Terraplane owners have told us of experiences with their cars that have seemed even to us almost incredible until we learned the details.

Thousands of trouble-free high-speed miles, emergency high-gear runs over rocky mountain roads in record time, accidents prevented by Terraplane agility, trips through mud and sand in the dead of night.

. . . in every story a thrill, in every thrill the assurance of Terraplane ruggedness, dependability and safety.

Yet the Terraplane is a gentle car—quiet, smooth, comfortable, instantly responsive. It is an amazingly economical car. It is a beautiful, sleek, low-slung car. . . . Have you driven a Terraplane yet?

Catholic Charities Meeting Planned

Five bishops in New York and New England dioceses are among some 49 Catholic prelates who have sent early acceptances to the invitation of Cardinal Hayes, archbishop of New York, to the nineteenth meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Charities in New York, October 1 to 4, it is announced from headquarters of the Conference in New York. The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, will also be present.

The meeting, which will mark also the centenary of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, the far flung Catholic lay charitable organization, is expected to attract in the neighborhood of 5,000 delegates and visitors from the United States, Canada and the West Indies.

There is every indication that in addition to offering one of the outstanding contribution of the times to the social and economic reconstruction of the country, the New York meeting will proceed in the most colorful background of religious pageantry in recent years. Nearly half of the hundred invited archbishops, bishops and auxiliary bishops of the Catholic church in America already have accepted while the lay attendance will embrace the outstanding figures in federal, state and municipal welfare work as well as leaders in private charitable activities throughout the country.

New York and New England bishops whose acceptances have been received so far are: Bishop John J. Collins, S. J., Fordham University, New York city; Bishop John H. Conroy, Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Bishop-elect John A. Duffy, Syracuse, N. Y.; Bishop Maurice F. McAuliffe, Hartford, Conn.; Bishop Joseph Edward McCarthy, Portland, Me.

Governor Lehman and former Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and U. S. Senator Robert F. Wagner will be active participants both at general sessions and in group meetings, which will center around such topics as families, children, health, child guidance, protective care, social and economic problems and neighborhood and community activities. Special sessions of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, Diocesan Directors, Conference of Religious and the Apostolate of the Sea are included in the program.

Discussion of efforts to coordinate municipal, state and Federal relief agencies will be led by Senator Wagner.

Formal sessions of the Conference will open Sunday, October 1, with Pontifical High Mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral celebrated by his Eminence Patrick Cardinal Hayes and at which Archbishop Curley of Baltimore will preach the sermon. It will close October 4th with a Conference Dinner at which Cardinal Hayes will be the speaker.

PRICE GOES UP SEPTEMBER first

Buy NIAGARA HUDSON COKE Now

AGAIN WE URGE YOU "Buy now for next winter . . . save money"

LAST May we said, "The price of Niagara Hudson Coke will go up at least 15% before next Christmas. Buy now." And hundreds made this saving.

The price of bituminous coal, from which our coke is made, has gone up. Yet today the price of Niagara Hudson Coke is substantially lower than it was a year ago. So again we say to you "Buy NOW. There's still time to make a real saving." This price goes up again September 1st. And our Budget Plan makes it easy to pay.

You can't get around these simple facts!

(1.) You have to buy fuel for next winter. (2.) Prices are going up. Yet the price of Niagara Hudson Coke is substantially lower now than at this same time last year. (3.) Thursday August 31st is the deadline. Phone your order now, and save money.

FIRE DEPARTMENTS.

At the present moment thousands of municipalities are preparing to embark on internal improvement projects, with the aid of federal funds appropriated under the public works bill. There is one opportunity for municipal progress that should be emphasized—the chance that is offered to improve and perfect the fire department. A great many towns are equipped with inferior apparatus—in scores of other towns apparatus has become outmoded or worn out. And it is by way of becoming an axiom that a second-rate fire engine is a very expensive "luxury" indeed. In fighting fire, true economy demands the best.

Fire department modernization comes legitimately within the limits of the public works bill as a "local improvement." The purpose of improvement projects now is two-fold: first to provide jobs; second to obtain something that is genuinely valuable for the money spent. "Improvements" which accomplish the first object only, are a waste of tax money; it would be infinitely cheaper to give direct relief to dependents. Fire department modernization creates jobs and gives full value for the money spent, as well.

It is probably true that many communities which have permitted their fire departments to get along with old or inferior apparatus for several years, have done so from a mistaken sense of economy. There are a thousand ways to cut the cost of government without imperiling life and property while doing it. Bring your fire fighting facilities up to date.

FARMING VS. POLITICS

In a recent radio address, Senator Arthur Capper observed that the result of failure of farmers to cooperate, was to lower the price of their produce to the lowest possible level, and said, "The only logical system in sight so far by which the farmer can bargain collectively—and effectively—for the sale of his products, in a highly organized society of buyers, is through cooperative marketing."

The word "only" should bear the accent in that quotation. The farmer, like the rest of us, has searched for a royal and easy road to prosperity and contentment. He has listened to purveyors of this panacea and that one, and has occasionally tried the medicine. He has, at times, made the very human error of believing that the government can cure all his ills.

The panaceas have failed. The government has helped a bit—but it hasn't solved anything in particular. And now the wise farmer is discovering that of which Senator Capper speaks—that the way to farm prosperity is through the farmers' own collective efforts, with a strong, loyally supported, aggressive cooperative as the instrument of progress.

It is noteworthy that the farmers who have won victories of one kind or another the past few years have been those who have centered their efforts around large, well intrenched cooperatives. The milk producers of New York, the walnut growers of California, the cotton raisers of the South—these are good examples that other groups of farmers might observe with profit.

THE USEFUL RAILROADS.

All forms of transportation have their uses and advantages—but when, in time of emergency or otherwise, we need fast and certain facilities for mass movement of men and materials, we invariably turn to the railroads. We have witnessed an example this year, in the case of the Civilian Conservation Corps. During April, May and June, the rails carried 400,000 of these men without interrupting regular service, and without a hitch. At one time, at Camp Knox, Kentucky, a train left every two hours, bound for points as far distant as Vancouver, Washington.

During late years, there has been a good deal of talk to the effect that the rails are outliving their usefulness, but there has been no convincing evidence. The question, "What will replace them?" is unanswered. Not airplanes—they are expensive and can handle the merest fraction of passengers and freight. Not buses and trucks, which are unable to meet railroad service in long-haul business. Not waterways, which are tremendously localized in the territories they can serve and are dependent on climatic conditions. The railroad has innate advantages which none of its competitors can duplicate. Prosperous and progressive railroads are one of greatest assets of every country.

TREATMENT FOR RHEUMATISM

Perhaps you are affected with chronic rheumatism of the joints and muscles and as you read of the great benefits to be obtained at these "Spas," springs or other institutions where alkaline drinks and baths are given, you wonder if you can be helped by this method of treatment.

As a matter of fact the treatment at these institutions where you drink alkaline waters, receive alkaline baths, are given massage and colonic irrigations (high enemas or injections into the lower bowel) is usually well worth the money expended.

By giving up your time and money for the purpose you are willing to follow faithfully the regular routine of the establishment.

Under this treatment any tendency to an acid condition—acidosis—is removed, wastes are more freely thrown out of the body by the skin and bowel, and the joints and muscles are made supple with more movement and less pain. The circulation of the blood is greatly improved during the treatment, better blood going to the parts, and more wastes removed.

However it may be that you cannot go to the spas for treatment because of lack of time or money. Can you get this treatment in your own community or at your own home?

It is usually possible to get the hot alkaline bath at home if a few handfuls of Epsom salts or other alkaline salts are thrown into the bath water. Some member of the family may be able to give the massage treatment and the manipulation of the joints, after he or she has learned the proper methods from a trained masseuse who should first be employed.

In regard to the alkaline drinks, these are obtainable in your drug store and if bottled properly are practically as effective as at the springs or spas themselves.

In regard to colon irrigations these should first be given by one trained in their use after which some member of the household may learn how to give them.

Thus you see the spa treatment may be obtained at home, but the results may not be as good, not because of the treatment itself, but because there is likely to be less regularity, and less supervision over the patient. The patient himself may have too much to say or do about the hours and methods, and everything connected with the treatment.

The HIDDEN DOOR

BY FRANK L. PACKARD

SYNOPSIS: Colin Knight, the mystery writer, is going about New York disguised as Clarkie Lunn, a minor criminal. He has been threatened with death by the Mask, New York underworld Czar; he had gone to Canada in an effort to get Joe Lacorre and get his help against the Mask. But there he stumbled onto a raid upon the Mask's huge counterfeiting plant by hi-jackers under a new gangster, Gaston Dollaire, and missed Lacorre. He met Germaine Tremblay, reporter, and now they are engaged. "Clarkie" just has been tipped off that Dollaire is at a night club with a "rum baron."

Chapter 28

CONTACT

SPINELLI'S enjoyed a reputation. There was no night club in New York that afforded better entertainment or a wider opportunity to spend money. It was expensive, but adroitly cosmopolitan.

Dinner jackets and "tails" mingled in utmost freedom with tweeds and what-nots; the ladies were equally without restriction in the choice of their ensembles, and a street costume was as welcome as an evening gown. Salvatore Spinelli demanded only two requisites from his patrons: an "introduction" by way of entrée—and the price.

Colin, as Clarkie Lunn, possessed both.

It had been a matter of only six or seven blocks from his room, and, encountering no taxi, he had walked; and now, still in one of the lower Fifties, he rang the bell of the three-story brownstone front with its shaded windows that harbored Spinelli's admittedly colorful contribution to the night life of New York.

He had been there many times before. The doorman therefore admitted him without question. He crossed the wide reception hall to the desk just inside the iron grille that barred further progress, but which was so disarmingly artistic and ornamental that its existence was robbed of any suggestion of premeditated offense. Here he laid down his five-dollar "subscription"—and the door of the iron grille opened for him. A page took his hat.

Colin thrust his hands in his pockets and for a moment stared around him. It was already after midnight. Spinelli's was in full swing. "Guests" were swarming in—he had not been the only one admitted at the same time.

Straight ahead of him was the dance floor, the entrance blocked by a bevy of men and women gathered around the doorway. From within, a saxophone was playing; and someone, a boy with glistening teeth and slicked hair undoubtedly, was crooning a song. Colin shrugged his shoulders. Oh, well, some people liked that sort of thing—and Spinelli's catered to all tastes!

On his right was a richly carpeted, spacious stairway. He turned in that direction. The bar was on the second floor. His feet sank noiselessly into the deep pile as he mounted the stairs. Dollaire! A month of futility, and now, least expected of all—Dollaire!

An uplift was upon him that he had not known for weeks. Whether merely contemptuous or not, or whether he knew it or not, Dollaire was playing against stacked cards. If Butch Connal and his mob had discovered that Dollaire was here, it was as good as a certainty that the Mask had discovered it too—and the Mask had a very large account to settle with Dollaire!

Contact at last! If luck broke for him tonight, he would be able to identify—not the Mask, he could hardly hope for that—but one, or more perhaps, of the Mask's tools. That would be enough! He would not ask for more than that—just to pick up the trail.

HE GAINED the landing and entered the barroom. It was a huge room—its appointments lavish. The mahogany bar that ran its entire length glistened even in the soft, rose-shaded lighting. People were coming and going, pairs and groups were standing about here and there, glass in hand; and yet the room was not crowded, for the bar, though it kept four or five white-coated attendants busy, was not the sole Mecca of the thirsty at Spinelli's—one came here mostly for the hard stuff.

Colin glanced up and down the room. Butch Connal's "drunk at the bar" was not hard to identify—or, at least, there was but one man present who was outstanding in that particular. Colin watched the man for a moment—a middle-aged man in a dinner jacket, his tie sadly awry, his gait none too steady as he moved here and there, chatteringly attempting to insinuate himself into everybody else's conversation. The typical inebriated pest of the garrulous variety!

Who was the man—if it was the man? He had never seen the other before. The man had certainly not been one of those from Butch Connal's gang who had visited Colin when he was in the hospital. Of course not! Butch didn't work that way. None better than Butch knew what was at stake and the danger that would be invited if Clarkie Lunn were in any way linked up with Paddy Turner's old mob—but Butch, when it came to details, made few mistakes.

The man, carrying his glass rather uncertainly, and having been summarily ejected from a group near by, was moving slightly in Colin's direction. Colin, starting toward the bar, purposely allowed their paths to cross. They bumped into each other, and the contents of the other's glass was spilled on the floor.

"Shay," said the man thickly, "sorry! Most awfully damn sorry! I—hic—apologize. Buy you another."

"I'm afraid it was your glass, not mine, that was spilled," smiled Colin.

Someone in the immediate vicinity laughed.

"'S no matter!" declared the inebriated one. "Buy you another all the same. Come on."

"All right," agreed Colin good-naturedly. "Just as you say."

There was an empty space at the far end of the bar. The "drunk" lurched in that direction. Colin followed.

"Make it—hic—two highballs," commanded Colin's new-found companion.

They were served with the drinks.

"Four dollars," said the barkeep amiably—Spinelli's was not cheap.

The "drunk" was apparently hard of hearing; and, besides, he was clinging a little precariously to the bar.

CÔLIN pushed a bill across the bar.

The barkeep grinned.

"And besides that," he said in a friendly undertone as he returned the change, "he'll talk the leg off you if you give him a chance—and he ain't got any bottom to his tank."

"Thanks," said Colin, "I'm on! But don't worry. I'm no Santa Claus."

The "drunk" had still apparently heard nothing; but, as the barkeep moved away to serve another customer, he turned and leaned heavily with his back against the bar. He spoke then over the rim of his glass as he lifted it shakily to his lips:

"Clarkie Lunn?"

"Yes."

"Ever hear of anyone by the name of Connal?"

"Butch sent me."

"Okay. Sorry to sting you for those four bucks—but it lets us both out. Got to keep up appearances, you know, or I wouldn't be worth a nickel to Butch. I don't travel around with the gang—not known as one of them. You're all right there. I'm undercover—see? There's a lot of things—worth cash—to get next to in these joints and around town."

"Anyone who's in with Butch is right with me," Colin answered.

The man swayed, upset a goodly portion of his highball, and then with a valiant effort carried the glass again to his lips.

"That goes both ways," he said. "I know what you want. Dollaire's brought his schooner up from St. Pierre with a full load of high-priced goods. It's somewhere out there just beyond the twelve-mile limit. Dollaire's been ashore all day angling for the best offer. It looks like Helmie Schwarm, the big booze baron, was coming across with the biggest wad. Anyway, the two of them are making love to each other now in the dance hall downstairs."

"I don't know either of them," said Colin.

"Well, you can't miss Helmie. He's a straw-haired Dutchy in a red tie and light suit like he always wears. He's sitting in one of those little stalls near the door, and the fellow that is with him is Dollaire. Anyway, they were both of them there a few minutes before you came in, and I guess they're there still, for they were just starting on a fresh bottle of fizz."

"Right!" said Colin. "I'll push on, then."

"Wait a second. Leave the breakaway to me. It'll screen better—and there's no telling who's looking. And—listen! I don't know what your game is, but watch your step! There's something queer going on around here tonight. I don't know yet what it is, but"—the drunk was suddenly patting Colin's arm. His voice rose:

"'Scuse me for a minute. Just saw an old friend of mine—hic—very intimate friend over there. I'll get him—hic—and we'll have another."

(Copyright, 1933, Frank L. Packard)

Colin gets an invitation, Monday, from a stranger.

Soon they are started, our hard-driving friends,
Roaring down straightaways, zooming 'round bends.
"One lap behind!" yells the Fluff.
"Give 'er gas,
Of Gasco, the Demon's the guy we must pass!"

The RAVEN

by EDGAR ALLAN POE

EDGAR ALLAN POE was left an orphan when he was two years old. A Virginia planter brought him up but his fondness for drink and gambling sent him to the grave at 40.

Poe's hobby was secret codes and his thrilling mystery stories are unsurpassed. Sensitive, gloomy and the possessor of a keen imagination, he composed beautiful poems filled with sad, haunting music that casts a deep spell over his readers. "The Raven" was written while Poe lived in a boarding house in uptown New York and first appeared in the "Evening Mirror" of January 29, 1845. In it he describes his deep despair at the loss of his loved one, Lenore, and tells of the raven who came to perch over his door and remind him, with its foreboding exclamation "Nevermore," of his sorrow.

The poem begins:

Once upon a midnight dreary,
As I ponder'd, weak and weary,
Over many a quaint and curious
Volume of forgotten lore,
While I nodded, nearly napping,
Suddenly there came a tapping
As of someone gently rapping,
Rapping at my chamber door.

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

WASHINGTON—The statement of Senator Key Pittman, chairman of the foreign relations committee of the senate, that the Monroe doctrine is "outworn" and a "constant thorn in the flesh of South American countries" has caused new speculation as to our future foreign policy with our neighbors to the south.

HERBERT PLUMMER

President Roosevelt advanced the "good neighbor" idea in his inaugural address. Also he had something to say about how a "good neighbor" should regard not only the sanctity of treaties, but the rights of others as well.

This was interpreted as bringing directly into the open the administration's future policy and attitude toward the Latin-American countries.

* * *

The press of domestic affairs has kept the President from elaborating much on what principles will govern his foreign policy. The Cuban flare-up threatened for a time, but skill and patience averted what might have proved to be a disastrous situation.

* * *

Interpreting Monroe

BUT Mr. Roosevelt has found time to give his interpretation of the Monroe doctrine and outline his conception of its true meaning as it affects our policy toward Latin-American countries.

It was at a meeting of the board of governors of the Pan American Union, that organization in Washington which has for its purpose the fostering of good will between the United States and Latin-America.

His view is that the sign post, put up in 1823 by President Monroe warning against European aggression on the western hemisphere, is "directed at the maintenance of independence by the peoples of this continent." He believes it is a Pan-American doctrine.

* * *

A Fear-Quieter

THE President voiced this interpretation at a time when no expansion of military preparedness is in prospect which would arouse possible concern in countries to the south.

He has said, in effect, that growth of the members of the American family of nations must rest on internal economic and social advancement and not on "acquisition of territory at the expense of any neighbor."

As chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, Pittman's criticism of the Monroe doctrine carries weight. Should a proposal ever be formally presented to the senate for its abandonment, a prolonged and lively fight is assured.

Senators, close students of Pan-American relations, have their own ideas on this moot question and would be prepared to defend them to the bitter end.

POLITICS at Random

By BYRON PRICE

(Chief Of Bureau The Associated Press, Washington).

NRA officials are emphasizing just now the temporary character of their authority, and of the codes which have gone so far to revolutionize business overnight.

One reason for this is that some of the most powerful business leaders have been showing a great deal of fight. The recovery administration was able to win them over only by appealing directly for cooperation for a limited period to meet an emergency.

The steel men, in particular, were obdurate when they envisioned anything like a permanent set-up along the lines proposed by the government. Even when they emerged from that midnight conference at which a three months' code was accepted, their faces showed nothing but worry.

Another thing which has troubled some officials is the possibility of a popular reaction on the assumption that a permanent system of strict state control was being set up in Washington. Officials are eager to have it understood the law expires in two years unless reenacted by congress.

Yet many thoughtful industrialists still are wondering how much of the new system ever can be scrapped.

Nearly everyone is convinced that child labor and the sweatshop are gone forever. Some think the minimum wage and shorter work week for industry in general are here to stay. Some argue that unless the whole experiment collapses business is likely to remain, even after the NRA is abolished, under a very stringent federal supervision.

Johnson's Future

The disclosure that General Johnson expects his job to finished by New Year's day raises an interesting chain of speculation as to his own permanency in the firmament of national affairs.

He may think he is through with politics, but whether politics is through with him is another question.

There is no doubt he dislikes the political game and is impatient with politicians. That does not modify the fact that few men have received so much of the very sort of publicity on which political fortunes, of their own accord, usually fatten.

When they saw his picture looking out from beneath the blue eagle in so many shop-windows, and his every word read eagerly by so many voters, some of the big men of the democratic party began to wonder.

They started a story that he was no democrat. He found it advisable to announce that he was "a democrat by inheritance, conviction and belief."

That didn't still the wonderings. Neither did the later news that he planned to step out within a matter of weeks.

He is comparatively young—just past 51—and in splendid health. Two things the politicians are thinking about:

The only parallel case is that of Herbert Hoover, who as food administrator similarly became an American institution and then retired from politics, which he never liked. Within a dozen years, in spite of several political missteps, Mr. Hoover was elected President.

Secondly, General Johnson is one of the right-hand men of Bernard Baruch, who knows the political ropes as well as the next fellow and who is well known in Washington as a man who likes to sit behind a throne.

The Test

It was of NRA's new conception of industry that General Johnson was speaking when he said recently: "If it is good, it lives; if it is bad, it will die."

If he were willing to talk about them at all, he probably would apply the same philosophy to his own political fortunes.

The model at the left is developed in a sheer ribbed crepe, in a wine shade, and crepe satin is introduced in the bodice and girdle of the frock that has brief little puffed sleeves.

The other costume is done in eel gray Canton faille, the one-piece frock having a yoke and collar outlined with novelty fagoting.

Note the shoulder width and pleated skirt details in both instances.

A broad-shouldered yoke of leopard that is merged with the snug collar distinguishes a suit of black bouclet woolen. The three-quarter coat is belted in front.

Next is a dress developed in black crepe satin, with both surfaces of the fabric utilized to advantage. The shoulders are widened by folds and hand fagotings make an effective trimming.

The companion frock combines black rough crepe with black Lyons velvet, the latter introduced in the deep bodice section the upper sleeves and shoulder loops.

Both dresses are decorated with glittering ornaments.

DID YOU KNOW THAT

Paris—One of the outstanding fashions of the current Paris openings is the general endorsement by most of the couturiers of distinguished novelty fabrics of rich texture. Among these the fancies in velvet weaves and the many metal novelties are most conspicuous.

Fourrures Heim revives chinchilla coney for smart short jackets and shoulder capes. This house also features fur sets of hat, capelet or gilet and muff worn over youthful suits, as one of broadcloth. These are also worn over smartly simple dresses in straightline silhouette but bias in cut. Some are in ribbed velvet; others are in wide wale corduroy or tweed or hairy woolens.

There is a recommendation of Paris this season for the elaborate, even "fussy" type of accessory particularly interesting by reason of the fact that smart French women have not in years been prone to ornate types of costume and accessory. This year we find even those society women noted for their classically severe styles of dressing appearing in frilly, ruffly organdie neckwear.

Afternoon suits at Lyolene's opening include one mat plush resembling summer ermine, with an Ottoman lame blouse, with belt and buttons of plastic matter suggesting spun brown sugar, such as confectioners use for decoration.

Sleeved dinner dresses reminiscent of the Mauve Decade are featured at Paris openings. One model developed in wine-red heavy faille has a basque top over an instep length skirt flaring stiffly at back; a huge cameo brooch at the throat and a rorepoint hankie peeking from a pocket in skirt, are other details. Another frock, more severely plain, reveals a straight bobble, with ripple drapery down the center back, and long tight sleeves, the only relief is a big, old-fashioned turquoise brooch at the front point of the neckline.

Developing Her Hobbies

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

There are more professions open to girls today than ever before. This has been repeated so often that it has ceased to impress the world.

But there is an extension too often overlooked. For every profession thus opened there are half a dozen side lines which can be used as hobbies and enjoyed with no thought of economic independence, and which can be pursued through all the exigencies of married life, enriching the home and the lives of all in it.

Architecture, for example, has begun to be practiced by women. It is an exacting and exhausting profession which is hard to practice when a woman has the care of a family on her hands and all the many details of the household to supervise.

But if a girl shows a taste for architecture it may be well to emphasize its by-products as a possible outlet. There is the history of architecture, or the history of some particular period or aspect of the art. Gardens as related to building comprise another phase which might be studied, or period furniture and decoration. Anyone of these subjects might and could be specialized in while engaged on the full time job of home-making.

Some girls show early an absorption in clothes which might be turned into practical ends as a hobby. Encourage them to design and plan clothes for their dolls.

A little real, constructive interest shown in a girl's efforts to express herself in any direction outside of the absorption in self so natural to youth will tend to encourage the development of an abstract interest in life itself, and may make of her in the end a rounded human being able to stand on her own feet and find happiness in life no matter what it may offer.

Greeks and Gracians

In the New Testament a sharp distinction is made between Greeks and Gracians. A Greek was a Gentile, either a native of Greece proper or of some country using the Greek language, while a Grecian is a Jew, speaking Greek, and using the Greek translation of the Old Testament.

Illustrated are two costumes for autumn wear, two of which sponsor high necklines gained by the Ascot scarf.

The costume at the left is done in a mixture woolen with a plaid woolen chosen for the lining of the swagger coat, and also for trimmings. The button and pocket details are interesting.

The center costume is developed in black crepe satin. Quilted shoulder width and large revers are noteworthy, with quiltings forming the decoration. The wrapped treatment of the skirt and the white Ascot scarf are attention-calling features.

The striped brown and tan tweed coat at the right illustrates a new three-way collar that may be worn high around the neck, piped on top of the shoulders or worn as sketched.

Explorer Tells of Three Hours Spent in Volcano

To be lowered into the active crater of Stromboli, clad in an asbestos suit and wearing a helmet strong enough to resist falling stones, with a breathing apparatus to save him from asphyxiation, was the exciting experience of an explorer.

The rope with which he was lowered into the depths of the crater had to be asbestos-covered lest it should shrivel up like tow and let him fall into the inferno below. Yet he remained down for nearly three hours, actually leaving his rope and making observations on the crater's floor.

On returning from his hazardous expedition, he said: "It was like being in hell to watch the fury of the volcano. The boiling lava was reminiscent of the sea in a storm. Every now and then great waves rose and, exploding, hurled over the rim of the crater masses of burning lava, hundreds of big stones, and clouds of ash. On the floor were pits, ten to thirty feet deep, lava seething in them like boiling porridge. As the bubbles burst there was a crash, and stones and other incandescent material was flung aloft. The walls around me assumed black, red and yellow tints, while from great cracks poured sulphur vapor."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Mysteries of Human Ear Still Awaiting Solution

The mechanism of the human ear has been known during long ages, but the manner in which it conveys definite information to the brain is another matter. The world is still far from a final pronouncement, however learnedly one may speak of sound-waves striking upon the drum of the ear and establishing a vibration which is communicated to the brain by a row of white threads attached to a series of wonderfully articulated bones. That the threads, like the aerials which catch the flutterings of the ether bearing sounds across the oceans, and give them rebirth exactly as they were born thousands of miles away, to the last squeak of the clarinet or chirp of the piccolo; translate to human brains the meaning conveyed by the air vibrations which lap against the ear-drum or tympanum does not greatly help.

A writer says: "We call the threads nerves, but how the tympanum adapts itself by contraction and relaxation to the different pitch of sound without our will intervening we have no idea. We know only that it does."

A Frankenstein

A Frankenstein is a person destroyed by his own works. The term is often erroneously applied to a monster. In Mary W. Shelley's "Frankenstein, or the Modern Prometheus," published in 1818, Victor Frankenstein is a young Swiss student who, while attending a German university, constructs a humanlike monster of materials obtained from cemeteries and dissecting rooms, and endues it with life by means of galvanism. The soulless monster, shunned by every living thing, is made frantic by unsatisfied human cravings, and commits atrocious crimes, finally inflicting a horrible retribution upon the man who usurped the prerogative of the Creator. The author of the book, who was the second wife of Percy Bysshe Shelley, gave the monster no name in her narrative, a fact which leads many into the error of referring to it as Frankenstein.

Celentano Quartet Delights Music Lovers

The music lovers of Kingston who were so fortunate as to be present to hear the Celentano String Quartet, assisted by Ilse Knauth Dunbar, soprano, at the home of Mrs. Antonio Knauth Friday evening, listened to a most delightful rendition of a program of beautiful music.

This Celentano String Quartet had made its "maiden appearance" at Saugerties a short time ago, winning friends whose loyal interest and appreciation grew with last evening's music. Not satisfied with the year's hard work at the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, the quartet has been devoting every possible hour to study during the summer and seems to have gained from the Catskill mountains something of the virility of the everlasting hills, as was shown in the first number on the program, Quartet in F Major, opus 32 by Edouard Hermann, who was present.

It requires many musical qualities to play Mr. Hermann's compositions, and the young men showed that they possessed these qualities; technique that could offer the proper medium of expression; imagination and temperament to give an understanding reading of the fine composition; the serious love of music that urged them on to come as near as possible to what the composer was asking of them.

The Quartet opened with an Allegro moderato that was brilliant, and compelling with a touch of mystery appearing again and again in the intricate pattern of the movement. The Scherzo was gay. Perhaps the dignity and richness as well as loveliness of the Andante-Adagio-Andante, was particularly appealing in the further development of the work. Becoming a little more at ease with their audience at close range—a difficult situation for much more mature players—the Quartet played this movement particularly well and carried the audience along with them thoughtfully. What they did in the vivid, prismatic Allegro, the closing movement, which made such exacting demands upon them was something to be proud of, and the entire performance so pleased the composer that he immediately congratulated each member of the quartet and the group, giving expression to his gratification at their fine performance of the work, and the audience followed his lead with very appreciative applause.

The appearance of Ilse Knauth Dunbar with Genevieve Nadeau as accompanist, was the signal for an enthusiastic burst of applause on the part of the audience. And it was particularly pleasing that Mrs. Dunbar had chosen a group of Brahms songs to sing, for Mrs. Dunbar sings her songs of Brahms beautifully. It seemed as though her always lovely voice had taken on added richness and an almost transparent clearness as she sang with her sincere and direct interpretation of their beauty. "Wie Melodien zieht es mich;" "Der Gang zum Liebchen;" and "Minnelied." She graciously added yet one more Brahms number as an encore insisted upon by her delighted audience. She was very sympathetically accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Nadeau.

The last group played by the quartet offered a particularly happy ending to a most enjoyable musical evening. There is mystery and loveliness and a human appeal in "An Old Castle" by Moussorgsky-Pochon in which there are some lovely passages for the 'cello. Grace and charm characterize the Menuetto by Boccherini and there was something decidedly individualistic and captivating in the Serenade by Borodin. As they grew better and better acquainted in musical friendliness with their audience the young artists took on more and more of that smoothly flowing style that is peculiarly theirs, and their listeners insisted that an encore number be given. Perhaps no one ever knows all that goes on in any Irish melody, for there are bound to be spirits and fairies, elves and perhaps a leprechaun or two. And an Irish melody may have today's as well as yesterday's interpretation, all of which was to be found in the encore number, "A Consideration of the Londonderry Air," as Mr. Celentano announced. Needing charmed fingers for the playing, they were those of the men of the Celentano String Quartet, who will take with them in their continuing musical work all sorts of encouraging and helpful good wishes of the friends they have made in this vicinity and at the home of Mrs. Knauth, whose helpful interest in sincere and promising young musicians materializes in such expressions of appreciation as her gracious hospitality last evening, which made possible the introduction of the quartet to a Kingston audience.

The delightful evening closed with a buffet supper and the opportunity for musical sociability so deeply appreciated by real music lovers.

Giovanni Celentano, first violin; Francesco Mele, second violin; Luigi Tavelli, viola and Julius Tannenbaum, violincello, are the Celentano String Quartet, whom their audience hoped to hear again.

HELP!

The train was racing along at sixty miles an hour, and Robinson was dozing in a corner of his compartment when he was disturbed by a fellow passenger rushing along the corridor.

"Excuse me," gasped this excited individual, "but is your wife a rather stout woman, wearing a brown costume and a red hat?"

"Yes," replied Robinson. "What's all the excitement about?"

"Excitement!" exclaimed the other. "The excitement is that she's just fallen out of the train."

"Good heavens!" shrieked Robinson. "Don't stand there doing nothing. Pull the communication cord. She's got the tickets."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Bad Beginning

Jane is a queer sort of a girl, and the other day she received a proposal from a man she had always regarded as a brother.

"Jane," he began, "you know I have always turned to you, always thought of you. May I—that is—would you—eh—oh, hang it, Jane, will you be my wife?"

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Jane. "What a start you gave me! At first I thought you were trying to borrow some money."—Border Cities Star.

Variability

"Do you regard poker as a gentleman's game?"

Mrs. Randolph—Don't you believe it, Mrs. Pennington! A friend of mine broke hers, and she didn't have seven years' bad luck. She was killed in an automobile accident the next day.

One-Track Mind

The attorney shook his head.

"My dear man," he said, "there are hundreds of ways of making money, but only one that's honest."

The banker looked puzzled.

"What's that?" he asked.

"Ah," smiled the other, "I thought you wouldn't know."

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bedore have an interesting rock garden at their place on North Chestnut street. Mr. Bedore has found many odd and curious rocks and plants in his walks through the country and mountains, including purple heather and wild cactus, which has large flat thorny leaves with red flowers. This plant is known in Arizona to be the prickly pear of the desert. Mr. and Mrs. Bedore have also a variety of flowers, bird houses and a bird bath in their garden, which add beauty to the place.

Christopher And Rip

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"Now," said Christopher Columbus Crow, as he flew along, "Rip likes to go through the woods; so I'll fly over them, looking down to see if any harm has come to him, and listening in case I hear sounds of distress."

And so he did, flying over the tree tops, all the while letting his eager eyes search the ground below for the lost dog.

But Christopher could hear and see nothing to show that Rip was in the neighborhood.

Then he flew out over the open road, and he thought:

"I'll fly over this road for some distance to see if I can find any trace of him along here. It may be true that he was so anxious for a walk that he went too far, and is still resting."

But Christopher flew on and on and no sign of Rip could he see.

"Let me think," Christopher said to himself. "Rip cannot be lost, as he knows his way around these parts too well. So that is not the trouble.

"If he had been hurt he would have sent word to us by this time. So that is not what is wrong.

"He must have been captured. But how? I know! Some dog catcher has picked him up. I must find him and I'll fly all over until I do."

Christopher flew and flew and flew and at last he heard the sounds of many dogs barking.

Down, down he flew and perched on the high grating overlooking the dog pound. "Rip!" he cawed.

"Oh, Christopher," cried Rip. At last help had come!

The Presbyterian Church has lined road hogs among sinners. And there will be no interdenominational dispute over this.

Gladys—Why are we stopping, Harry?

Harry—There's a Miss in the car.

That new ninety miles an hour train will present a new problem to seventy miles an hour motor car drivers. How will they be able to meet it at the crossing unless they start earlier?

What we need is an automobile that is afraid of trains.

Katherine—I dreamed we were out riding last night, and you stepped the car way out in the country on a secluded side road.

Pennington—Yes, dear, then what happened?

Katherine—Well, I woke up walking in my sleep.

The way in which some owners park their cars leads to the question, "Who owns the streets?" As a matter of fact, the streets belong to the public and no one has any more rights and privileges on them than any other citizen. But from the way some drivers use the streets one might infer that they thought they had preferred privileges.

She married him because she liked his car;
But he can't buy gas, so they don't drive so very far.

Traffic Cop—Why didn't you stop when I whistled?

Motorist—I'm sorry, I didn't hear you.

Traffic Cop—Well, you'll get your hearing in the morning.

Captain Frank Hawks recently made a successful transcontinental flight with his plane piloted by a robot. The robot probably will never be applied to motor cars because of objections by backseat drivers. There probably wouldn't be much satisfaction in giving advice to a robot. It wouldn't talk back.

Edithe—Quite a nice job, Elmer. But tell me, what's making all that noise?"

Elmer—That, Edithe, my darling, is nothing but the rumble seat rumbling.

One sign of returning prosperity is the increasing number of people who decide that they can save money by buying a new car.

Wife—So you got a stiff fine for smashing up someone's car? I thought you said you had a friend at court who would fix things for you?

Husband—Just my luck. He was the fellow I ran into.

Even though the detour is getting there by the back way, it presents a change of scenery.

Youth—How did your father know we went out in the car yesterday?

Sweet Young Thing—Quite simple! Remember that stout gentleman we ran into? That was father.

The worm will turn, and that's all right. But the most troublesome of the species is the road worm that turns without signaling how, when and where.

Flora—Kreisler makes wonderful music.

Dora—I thought he made automobiles.

Thirty million motorists lose thirty years altogether waiting for the green light—but consider how long they would wait for release from the hospital if they jumped the red light.

Nervous Passenger—Don't drive so fast around the corners. It makes me frightened.

Chauffeur—You don't want to get scared. Do what I do—shut your eyes when we come to corners.

Love is what makes the rumble seat seem comfortable.

Gandhi's political formula is very simple: "If you don't do what I want, I'll die on you." The only trouble with that is that he may.

A New Jersey judge says a husband is justified in slapping his wife if she calls him bad names. So a wife is probably justified in kicking her husband for the same offense. Why bother the courts about little things like that?

The elderly policeman from India who arrived in New York with a beard 78 inches long must have found American mustaches highly amusing.

Automobile brakes, engineers say, must have more power than the motors. But that isn't true of the business recovery machine. There's too much holding back now.

All the world is watching our new deal, ready to jump into the game if it works.

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS & SOUNDS

By ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD—Different among the new pictures is Clarence Brown's production of "Night Flight."

The film is based on a prize novel by Antoine de Saint-Exupery, and deals with the first night run of a South American air mail service, with the entire action set between the hours of noon and midnight.

Simply stated, it is the story of the airman's conquest of the danger-fraught night sky, and a group of first-rank stars translate it into human terms. The only "menace" in the piece lies in the elements which, as photographed, are terrifying enough.

The Mail Must Move

John Barrymore is seen as indomitable manager of an air mail company at Buenos Aires, a hard-driving, seemingly cruel executive whose determination to progress with his service brooks no obstacles and scorns no risks. Despite fog and storm and the hazards of uncharted mountain flying he sends his ships—and their pilots—off into the night. He allows no sentimental reflections to balk his ambition for the service.

Three pilots take part in the drama. Robert Montgomery battles through storms and lands. Clark Gable, caught in a worse one, is lost. William Gargan, the third, takes off through the fog. The life of one—the fears and hopes, the risks and obstacles, the courage and joy—is the life of all. The air mail service goes on.

Adventure Aloft

Much of the film is devoted to Gable in his plane, battling his way, watching his gasoline supply run low as the storm gets worse, and to Helen Hayes, his wife, waiting at home to dine with him. Suspense builds upon suspense as the hours pass. Even with Gable's fate uncertain, Barrymore calls Gargan from home and wife (Myrna Loy) to set forth on a new "night flight," while Helen Hayes, hysterical with fear, berates her husband's employer for his heartlessness.

Lionel Barrymore is in the film, too, as a company inspector, who tries to emulate his boss's sternness without success, and whose part, oddly enough, is the "comedy relief."

Excellent photography and a dramatic musical score are potent in the effectiveness of the film.

Fishes Have Tongue

The tongue is present in fishes, but is a hard and immovable swelling in the floor of the mouth and is practically devoid of muscles. In a few species, teeth are developed on the tongue.

Kingston: "Storm at Daybreak". Serbia, birthplace of the world war, is the setting of this excellent talkie. The story concerns itself with the mayor of a small Serbian town, the mayor's wife, and a young Hungarian officer who falls in love with her. The mayor, who is a personal friend of the youthful officer, sees his wife falling under the charm of the officer, and tries to accept the heartaches like a man. Then into the city rides Archduke Ferdinand and shortly after his arrival, an assasin murders him, sending the world into the greatest blood-letting game in history. Excitement, romance, reality and beauty are all skillfully blended into this picture, making it a dramatic treat of the first magnitude. One of the outstanding things the show offers is the quality of the cast. Walter Huston, Kay Francis, Nils Asther, Eugene Pallette, Phillips Holmes, and Jean Parker are all featured in important roles. Something to see.

Orpheum: "Hello Everybody" and "Lone Avenger." Kate Smith sings her heart out in the first double feature offering, and the famous radio star proves appealing in a role created especially for her on the screen. Many of the singer's favorite songs are brought to the audience, and a capable cast lends ample support to the ample Miss Smith. "Lone Avenger" with Ken Maynard plus his gallant steed Tarzan, rush through a series of hair-raising adventures in this western thriller of gun battles, robbers, fisticuffs, and romance.

Broadway: "The Eagle and the Hawk". A grim study in friendship, brilliantly done, is this tragedy of the war in which two young men, one a renowned ace of the squadron, the other his best friend, work out their destiny in the cockpit of an airplane, with one a suicide, the other a disillusioned boy. Frederic March contributes one of his finest performances in the fascinating character of the ace of the flyers, a man who becomes more and more certain that the whole business of killing is horrible and senseless, and the thought of the constant suffering and brutality that the war imposes is too much for him. He goes to pieces under the train, and suicides. His best friend, played by Gary Grant, takes the dead body of his pal, straps it into his plane, and heads for the enemy lines. Together they fall, March a hero to his buddies and the world at large, Grant a tragic pawn in the game of war. Jack Oakie handles the comedy end of the talkie in his usual capable style, and Carole Lombard, as the girl, is beautiful and effective in a secondary part. The combat scenes are especially thrilling in this talkie, and some of the air shots are spectacular in their beauty. Although tragic, this talkie is exceptional entertainment.

Tomorrow

Kingston: Same.

Orpheum: "Goldie Gets Along" and "Rusty Rides Again." Ed Dancer, Sam Hardy and Charles Morton figure in this story of a young lady who knew how to handle situations and men with neatness and dispatch. "Rusty Rides Again" gives Tim McCoy another opportunity to battle men, mountains and plains in his quest to save the girl and to get the enemy. At that, it's pretty fast moving drama. Also, the final chapter in the serial thriller "Hurricane Express" will be a part of the program. All is revealed in this last stirring chapter, and those who have been following the story, shouldn't miss this last chapter.

Broadway: Same.

Number of Men in Boer War

In the Boer war, there were engaged on the British side from the outbreak of the war until the conclusion of peace 448,433 men of all arms. The number of men the Boers had will probably never be known. It has been estimated by competent authorities at from 60,000 to 65,000.

Damage At Watson Hollow and Moonhaw

West Shokan, Aug. 24.—The clearing of the weather Thursday together with the gradual subsiding of flood waters afforded an opportunity for a more detailed report of the damage wrought in Watson and Maltby Hollows. By dodging washouts in the road and in other places crawling along small fills over the rock strewn roadbed it is possible to drive an automobile to a point toward the head of Watson Hollow, where the road makes a wooded right turn with the stream just below the residence of Abel Every. Just beyond a plank bridge spanning a tributary emptying into the main stream was lifted bodily and floated down to the highest point in the roadway where it now rests high and dry, while the roadway and decking in the bend replaced after the August, 1928, flood is completely torn away. Just above to the left the high foot bridge over the main stream connecting with the Every residence went down with the flood when struck by a floating tree.

Mr. Every when interviewed by the writer Friday afternoon stated that he had made a personal investigation beyond to the head of the hollow where once was the main settlement in the long gone by boom days of the tanning and lumbering industry. Here are located a number of summer residences and camps whose occupants are entirely removed from the outside world except by means of traveling on foot. These people are immediately cut off by the Winchell bridge, as it is known, going out, which carries the water from another mountain tributary crossing the highway and there emptying into the main stream. This bridge was one of the five rebuilt in 1928. Still further above beyond the forks of the road the left leading up the Canape Valley, and the right over Red Hill, as that section of the highway is known, leading over the mountain to Peekamoose Lake, likewise suffered damage. The Canape bridge which went out in 1928 was never replaced.

As one returns again down the valley at Delos Eckert's farm the long dock cribbing replaced in 1928 shows its skeleton framework, the stone work partly washed out. At this point the 30 foot span plank bridge over the main stream leading to South Hollow and the Charles Warren estate, also replaced five years ago by the county, lies swept aside intact by the mighty impact of a giant birch tree which had been cut last winter along the bank of the stream just above and there had lain in the stream bed until the flood gates were opened wide and the waters swept the branching trunk down to collide with the high bridge structure, and after completing its work of distruction again come to rest in mid-stream some 50 feet below the beached bridge.

Here, too, the Mink Hollow brook discharged its flood waters from the left and the raging South Hollow stream on the right combined to a tremendous volume of water to the Bushkill stream. Here the roadway is partly eaten away with a sheer drop of 10 feet to the stream bed.

At the bend as the stream swerves past the Leland Boice farm some hundred yards down the roadway, both road and decking are washed out in practically the same manner as in '28. Proceeding further the roadway runs parallel with the stream and a short distance above the familiar residence of Gene Kerr, the famous bear hunter, now, deceased, the road is again cut away but fairly passable. Opposite the Kerr residence, which at present is occupied by Mrs. Kerr and her daughter, Jennie, the west abutment is undermined of the high plank bridge affording a connection with the Highland bungalow colony residents. They too are cut off as the bridge is not safe for an automobile to pass. The predecessor of this bridge likewise was a victim of the '28 flood. Repairs to this damage are being made by former Commissioner Ernest Eckert with his team and the assistance of Abel Avery and son.

Only a distance of 200 feet below this point part of the decking and roadway rebuilt in '28 is torn out. To the right at this point the flood swerved over its high stony bed to cut a new channel through the fine meadow which is part of the property of former Commissioner Egbert Boice. Returning, the main body of the flood kept to its former bed while part followed straight down along the highway cutting off connection with Mr. Boice's barn during the height of the rampage.

Still further down, where the waters again converged, a portion of the road and decking in front of the property owned by Nelson Boice is seriously damaged. This was another of the vulnerable points of attack by the '28 flood. Swinging with the bend of the highway past the Hayes estate, formerly the Sigourney property, the flood rushed on, a portion sweeping between the fine flower and vegetable garden and over into the roadway, but fortunately not doing much damage. The private plank bridge over the main stream slightly below the caretaker's residence, held, due to the fact that the waters had split at the point above the garden and spread wide below. The next succeeding serious point of road damage, although passable and being filled in on Friday, lies at either end of the concrete bridge spanning the Wittenberg stream, which at this point empties into the main stream. The private road from the west approach to the bridge leading through the familiar stone gates and following for approximately a half mile the Wittenberg stream to the former Lambert estate now owned by his stepson, Dr. Henry L. Bibby of Kingston, is badly washed and gullied.

Turning left from the main highway a short distance beyond at the intersection of the Moonhaw road it is noted that a flood of water has followed the road from above leaving gullies alongside and the stones washed bare at intervals all the way past Benj. J. Winne's corner property, formerly Blue Gates, and on up the valley. At the point where the highway meets and follows along the Wittenberg stream the road is quite badly cut away and just beyond the once attractive and sturdily built 20 foot span Glen Atty bridge, with steel girders and reinforced stone sides collapsed into the maddened stream. This bridge was used as the upper entrance to the Lambert property and was built about 30 years ago by Ira C. Forbes and George Selmon.

Further above as the road leads to Moonhaw Club, all passage is cut off before reaching the property of Conservation Supervisor Ralph Cramer where the stream has completely obliterated the roadway and scooped away into the hillside.

Perhaps a week will elapse before a fill can be made to afford a passage for cars. A fleet of five of the state's new Chevrolet trucks are marooned at Mr. Cramer's place where they were left over night Wednesday.

Moonhaw Club and its members too are isolated from the outside world except by the mode of foot travel for supplies. The rustic bridge connecting Moonhaw Lodge and Moonhaw Club located on either side of the right fork of the upper stream is washed away and the dam below filled with rocks which were carried along by the two flooded streams converging at its entrance.

The tumbling boulders added their din to that of the rushing waters so that Wednesday night was a sleepless one for the Moonhaw population.

The torn roadbed and stone decking at the north approach to the Bushkill iron bridge where the flood burst its bounds sweeping in considerable of its volume down over the Maple Dell Farm property and wreaking its vengeance on the way, is undergoing repairs begun Friday under the personal supervision of Commissioner William Jordan with a gang of local workers and several teams and trucks drawing stone. The state also came to the rescue with approximately 125 hands from the Boiceville Conservation Camp in charge of their foremen. Several trucks are with the detachment carrying the men to and from camp and hauling stone for the various fills under headway. A report current at this writing is to the effect that members of the town board are to view the damaged conditions Saturday morning in connection with county and state authorities.

SPEAKERS CHOSEN FOR SECOND YOUTH CONGRESS

The Speaking and Forum Interest Group leaders' program for the Second Youth Congress to be held at the Y. M. C. A. Camp at Glenerie on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, September 15, 16 and 17, will be a particularly fine one. The Rev. Robert L. Mauterstock, pastor of the M. E. Church at New Paltz, will open the congress on Friday evening with an address on "Personal Religion".

Saturday morning, Mrs. Grace Sloan Overton, director of the Youth Department of the New York Federation of Churches, will speak on "Moral Sanctions". Mrs. Overton was heard by several local young people in her presentation of this topic to the Youth Council Conference at Albany this year.

The Rev. Thoburn Legg, recently appointed pastor of the M. E. Church of Port Ewen, will speak Saturday afternoon on "International Understanding". The Rev. Mr. Legg, a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary, is much interested in this vital subject.

Sunday morning the job of closing the congress will fall to Clarence S. Schoonmaker, general secretary of the Kingston Y. M. C. A.

The leaders of the Forum Interest Groups are also leaders in the groups they will lead.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD SETS OPEN MARKET POLICY

Washington, Aug. 26 (AP).—The federal reserve board intends that its expansion or contraction of credit through bank purchases of government securities "shall be governed with a view to accomodating commerce and business and with regard to the general credit situation of the country."

Consequently, it was held unofficially today that there is not likely to be, soon, a sizeable decrease in the amount of money the twelve central reserve banks spend in "open market" operations—purchasing government securities.

The banks stepped their purchases up to $35,000,000 last week from $11,000,000 the week beore.

Railroads in War Time

Under government operation during the World war the primary railroad goal was to move the traffic arising out of war demands as expeditiously as possible. Railway executives had admitted their inability to do this satisfactorily. That is why the government assumed operation of the properties.

HOW

MARINE LIFE GIVES LIME FROM THE OCEAN WATERS—Where ocean waters are sufficiently warm and clear, and move rapidly enough to supply the needed food, corals are busy salvaging the element calcium from the dissolved salts, and building it into reefs or islands of carbonate of lime, that may some day develop a soil covering in the service of man, writes Dr. R. J. Wheeler in the Rural New-Yorker. Great accumulations of carbonate of lime from such a source are the basis of the everglade soils of the lower east coast of Florida where, with the aid of fertilizers and manganese sulphate, tomatoes are raised in great quantities for northern markets.

In the ocean, at great depths, minute shell builders are also at work building oceanic ooze, that at some distant time may contribute its quota of calcium carbonate to the building of new lands. At higher levels the familiar oysters and clams, and thousands of other hard-shelled forms of marine animals, are always busily building shells of carbonate of lime out of the dissolved calcium salts that may have been contributed to the ocean by all of the landed areas of the world. It is such shells as these, that have been transformed into the world's great deposits of limestone and marble. They have contributed to the building of some of the richest soils of the world—"limestone soils."

How Limburger Got Name; How It Is Manufactured

Limburger cheese takes its name from the town of Limburg in Belgium but is widely manufactured in Germany, other northern European countries and some sections of the United States. It is made from freshly drawn and still warm cow's milk. The milk is heated to a temperature of 94-96 degrees F., then curdled with rennet. The curd is cut, partly drained and dipped into forms and allowed to drain by gravity. The cheeses are salted on the surface and placed on shelves in the curing rooms where they are ripened at a temperature of 58-64 degrees F. During the ripening period they are rubbed and washed several times in salt water. Limburger has a smooth texture, the consistency of butter and a strong penetrating odor. It is very digestible—and its only real drawback is that it suffers from halitosis.

How "Taps" Originated

It is impossible to say exactly when the custom of sounding a farewell note over a deceased soldier, or the firing of volleys, originated. The ancient Romans, at the burial of military citizens, gathered around the bier and called the dead three times by name, after which the word vale (farewell) was pronounced and the ceremony concluded. This would appear to be the origin of the three salutes. Taps is the bugle call for lights out, or the last action of the day, and corresponds to the farewell. The precise call originated in the United States, but is paralleled by the English Last Post and the Retraite of France.

How Birds Propose

Many birds propose marriage to one another, much as we do ourselves, by the offer of love tokens. Penguins of the Antarctic signify their desire to become engaged by picking up stones and laying them at the feet of their enchanters—a hint that they should make a nest of stones. Our little warblers offer leaves or bits of grass to one another when courting. A house-sparrow will lay at the feet of his ladylove the petal of a crocus. Usually she takes no notice. Nesting herons present each other with sticks, while a courting cock grebe will suggestively offer a young hen a bunch of water-weeds.—Answers Magazine.

How Fourragere Is Bestowed

The Fourragere is bestowed on entire units for special exploits or general excellence. There are three classes: First class carries the red cord of the Legion of Honor, second class carries the green and yellow cord of the Medale Militaire and third class carries the green and red cord of the Croix de Guerre. The unit which has been decorated carries the color throughout its existence. Individual members of the unit at the time of decoration may wear the ribbon, but not later recruits.

How "Sink or Swim" Started

This phrase often heard in modern speech literally means that some one is on his own resources and can depend on no one else for aid. It is supposed to have originated in the days when witches were bound and thrown into the water. If they sank they were guilty, and if they floated they were declared innocent.

How Wampum Was Used

Wampum belts were used in the ratification of every important treaty negotiated with the eastern tribes from the early Colonial period down to the great intertribal treaty of Prairie du Chien in 1825. Such belts usually had the beads arranged in symbolic figures.

How Much Colt Weighs

The office of horse husbandry says that a colt at birth generally weighs about one-tenth of the dam's weight. For example, a 1,000-pound mare will generally have a foal weighing about 100 pounds at birth.

Capital of Turkey

Constantinople, or Istanbul, as it is called in Turkish, ceased to be the capital of Turkey when that country became a republic in 1922. Since that time Ankara, formerly spelled Angora, has been the capital of the Turkish republic.

ULSTER COUNTY COUPLE IDENTIFIED WITH AFFAIR

The centenary of Denman Thompson's birth and the bicentenary of the Town of Swanzey, N. H. with which Mr. and Mrs. Henry Horton of Ulster county, and Ellenville, were identified, Henry Horton being the guest star of the play, "The Old Homestead," made famous by Denman Thompson which was presented at City Hall, Keene, N. H. August 17 and 18, and Mrs. Horton in charge of the publicity, aroused wide spread interest and remarkable patronage. Mrs. Horton writes of the success of the celebration. A repetition of the play was made necessary because of the demand for seats, and a matinee was given, in addition to the evening performances, to which the children of the Town of Swanzey were invited and the members of the N. H. Pythian Home who live in the former Denman Thompson estate at West Swanzey. Never in the history of its Keene performances could its oldest spectator, and one lady had seen every performance of the play ever given there, recall larger or more enthusiastic audiences. From all the New England states they came and from New York state, too, as the license plates of motor cars indicated.

The Boston and New York city papers all mentioned the event and the Boston Sunday papers had featured stories about it. The Associated Press sent word of it throughout the United States.

MEMBERS OF MUSICIANS UNION EXPECTED TO PARADE

Paul Zucca, head of the music committee for the NRA parade, says that all members of Musicians Union, Local No. 215, A. F. of M., are expected to participate in the parade at 2 p. m., Thursday, August 31. The place of assembly will be announced later.

All band members who would care to play in the bands to be furnished by this local are asked to get in touch with Everett Rosa or Salvator H. Castigione, leaders of the two bands, or call the secretary of the local, John A. Cole, at 701-W.

Mountains Commonplace, but Sea Is Mystifying

To a man reared on the western prairies who for the first time goes down to the seashore, it seems an inexplicable mystery that he can reach a place where the land actually comes to an end—and right before his eyes. He has read about it, observes a columnist in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, but nevertheless, there is the miracle; and usually he has to thoughtlessly get his shoes filled by the surf before he realizes the marvelous sliding powers of a rather innocent wave on the sand.

A contemplative soul will linger long by the sea, just looking. Mountains may be commonplace to him—made so by his western wanderings, but the ocean is not. And it never is, many times as he may afterward see it. One may climb over a mountain range and look down on the other side, but the seven seas have no end. They run the wide world around. Perhaps it is this sense of illimitability that so deeply impresses. It provokes to poetry, quoting it or writing it.

"Hansom Cab" Inventor Was Popular Architect

In 1833 Joseph Aloysius Hansom registered an invention with the British patent office—the drawings and model of "a one-horse, two-wheel, safety vehicle"—and soon found a manufacturer for the article. So great was the demand that in 1840 he disposed of his patent for $50,000. The patent was to become known all over the world as the "hansom cab."

Hansom was born in York, in 1803, and was educated as an architect, and when he died, June 29, 1882, and was buried at the Church of St. Thomas of Canterbury, Fulham, London, he had been several times declared a bankrupt but had nevertheless managed to design important buildings all over England, notably St. Asaph's college, Darlington convent, St. Walpurge's at Preston, and Plymouth cathedral as well as churches at Ryde, Dalkeith, Leeds, Ripon, Acomb and Manchester.

Beetles Live Under Water

"Beetles with their anatomy all organized for breathing air, yet which live under water and get air to breathe only once in their lives, have been found in the cold, swift brooklets in the Great Smoky mountains, between Tennessee and North Carolina," says a Science News Letter. These curious insects, it is explained, hatch under water and there pass their entire lives except for a brief period after they have reached the pupal stage when they come out into the upper air for a short flight to insure their distribution. How it is that insects that have no gills or similar apparatus and only a small reservoir of air under their wing cases can exist under water for months is a puzzle to scientists. That their oxygen requirements are very low on account of their inactivity is the only explanation that has been offered for this phenomenon.

Use for Elder Stalks

Elderberry is named Sambucus from the Greek name of an ancient stringed instrument, probably of Semitic origin, a harp with cords of different substances and lengths, not very unlike our modern harps, but made of the elder stalks. Some were small, like the Welsh harp, and others powerful and as big as the modern instrument. The sambucina were, in Greece, female harpists who mostly came from Egypt or from Asia and who played standing, or sitting. Greek dancing girls who swayed to the music of the sambuca were of indifferent morals, often, but always beautiful. They swathed their bodies in a square white cloth which was held by fingertips.

Giant's Causeway Result of an Upheaval of Basalt

The formation of the Giant's causeway, according to geologists, is the result of an upheaval of basalt along the northern coast of Ireland which occurred during the Tertiary period. This has left a weird and unusual promontory of broken pillars in a series of cliffs which project into the North channel near Bengore Head, about eight miles from Portrush.

When the volcanoes of this district were in activity they sent out sheets of lava over nearly the whole country of Antrim and the adjoining parts of Londonderry and Tyrone. Their molten masses were poured out over the chalk that lies deep below, and ages of erosion have left the cold and rigid columns seen today.

Within an area of several hundred square yards there are some 40,000 of these pillar-shaped rocks and they are cut as if by mathematical calculation. They range in diameter from 15 to 30 inches, most of them being six-sided, although some have five, seven, eight and even nine regularly formed sides. Some are 20 feet in height.

The Giant's causeway received its name from a legend that this group of basaltic rocks was once part of a bridge or causeway over which giants passed between Ireland and Scotland.

Banana Industry

The banana industry had a modest enough beginning. At first there was Friar Tomas de Berlanga, who took a banana plant from Gran Canaria, to Santo Domingo in 1510. The schooner Reynard is said to have carried 30 bunches of bananas to New York in 1804, the magazine, Fortune, relates but the venture was not pursued. In 1866 there was an attempt to ship bananas from Panama to the United States, but it was abandoned. The first successful effort to ship bananas from the tropics to markets in the United States came when Capt. Lorenzo Baker, a Cape Cod sailing master, picked up a lot of bananas at Port Morant, Jamaica, for 25 cents a bunch and sold them in New York 11 days later for $2.50 and $3 a bunch.

When Education of Deaf Started

The first attempt to teach a deaf-mute recorded in the United States was Philip Nelson's in Rowley, Mass., 1679. From 1773 to 1776 there was a deaf boy in John Harrower's school, Fredericksburg, Va., but not until the early Nineteenth century was concerted action taken to educate deaf children. Francis Green of Boston, whose deaf son was sent to Edinburgh to be educated at Thomas Braidwood's institution, became much interested in the problem. With some ministers, he attempted a census of Massachusetts, 1803, when 75 deaf was found. They then estimated 500 deaf in the United States and urged the creation of a special school.

Indian Mounds

The Indian mounds found through much of the Mississippi region are believed by many to be caches of Indian treasures. This belief, Smithsonian archeologists point out, is entirely without foundation. Many mounds were used for burial of the dead. Excavation often reveals cherished personal objects interred with the bones of prominent Indians. But such objects have no material value and are of interest only as they throw light on the pre-Columbian culture pattern.

The First Anesthetic

The first anesthetic was used only about 90 years ago; the germ theory of disease was proved only about 70 years ago; antiseptic surgery was founded only about sixty years ago; the first appendix operation was performed only about 50 years ago; the X-ray is only forty years old. At the beginning of the century cholera, smallpox, diphtheria, yellow fever, malaria and other diseases were scourges which swept the world intermittently, destroying millions of lives.

Black Bass Popular

Perhaps the most popular species of game fish that swims in the waters of the Middle West is the black bass. Due to the wide distribution of this excellent game fish, it is taken in almost every section of the North Woods and in many waters of Illinois and Indiana.

NRA Effect On Dixie Schools Slight; Its Child Labor Already Cut Buy Law

Abolition or reduction of child labor in industry might be expected to throw an additional burden on the schools when this potential supply of pupils is released. This is the second of three stories dealing with this phase of the recovery program.

Atlanta (AP)—Compulsory school laws and cooperation of industrial plants over a period of several years have reduced to a minimum any problems of increased enrollment that might be caused by adoption of the national recovery program in the south.

School officials in states where textile mills and other industrial communities abound say they anticipate no difficulty in caring for those additional children who will enter or return to school this year because, under provisions of the NRA, they will not be allowed to work.

School Attendance Compulsory

State laws make it compulsory that all children attend school until they have reached the age of 14, and those between the ages of 14 and 16 are not allowed to work except by permit, issued upon approval of local school superintendents.

A check of records of the Georgia department of industrial relations, shows that between January 1, 1933, and July 17, 1933, when the textile code became effective, only 502 permits to work were issued to children between the ages of 14 and 16. These are scattered over more than a dozen communities and will be absorbed by their respective schools without increasing the burden of attendance.

North Carolina authorities report that only 950 children in that state were affected by the code and that no problem in caring for them is anticipated. Ample school facilities are provided in all industrial communities and cooperation of employers with school authorities in enforcement of the compulsory attendance law has reduced child labor to a low figure.

No Letdown Seen

While elementary and high school revenues in the several states will be somewhat lower than last year, educational officers say they do not expect a lessening of school efficiency as a result of the code.

In Tennessee, where it is estimated 2,000 children will be thrown out of work under the codes, a decline of 25 per cent in school revenues is anticipated.

"This will not lessen school efficiency as much as it might appear at first glance," said James A. Roberts, assistant state commissioner of education, "because reduction in costs will offset a part of the loss."

Labor Commissioner W. E. Jacobs of Tennessee says there are no children under 14 working in the state.

"We are enforcing strictly the labor laws of this state with reference to children and women," he said. He pointed out that before a child under 16 can obtain a permit to work he must establish that his earnings are necessary to maintain either himself or his family.

Fewer than 4,000 children are employed in industry in Alabama and since the state's total school enrollment is well over 600,000 they will have little effect on the schools should they enter.

Opportunity for Pickers

In the eastern and central parts of the south, where the cotton crops usually are tended by the small farmer and his family, there is a prospect that child cotton pickers will have more schooling as the result of the cotton acreage reduction program. Often in the past many of them have been kept out of school a month or so to finish the harvest. That's the view of Cully A. Cobb, cotton production administrator for the agricultural adjustment administration.

Nationwide elimination of child labor is not expected to increase school enrollments appreciably in most of the southern states where textile mills operate. Generally there, children under 17 work under permit only and the total is reported small in relation to existing enrollments. Cotton-picking children, however, may have increased educational opportunities.

MODENA

Modena, Aug. 26—The severe rain and wind storm which raged in this section during the early part of the week, did considerable damage to crops, etc., uprooted trees, put telephone lines out of commission, and raised havoc, generally. But considering the wreckage left by the hurricane which swept the eastern coast, people here are indeed fortunate to escape so easily.

Many people from this place attended the Ulster County Agricultural Exhibition, which was held in the New York State Armory in Kingston. It was regrettable that weather conditions were not favorable, still a large crowd was present to view the exhibits.

Eber Smith of Modena, who has been in training in the Danville State Hospital in Pennsylvania during the past years, has received the appointment of supervisor of the men's tubercular cottage at the institution. This promotion is regarded as a splendid advancement, and the many friends of Eber, in this section of the country, are indeed pleased to learn of his promotion.

Entrants in the baby show, which was the opening feature of the community outing in the Recreation Park in Newburgh Wednesday afternoon, included Ruth and Richard Guice, twin babies of the Rev. and Mrs. Robert Guice, and Margaret A. Williams of Modena.

Baseball games scheduled to be held on the local diamond during the past week were called off on account of rainy weather.

A number of local people attended the funeral of the late Dewitt Ostrander which was held at the Friends Church in Clintondale, Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Freston Paltridge and daughter, Gloria, spent Wednesday in Poughkeepsie.

Mr. and Mrs. Wurts Taylor and son, Donald, of Albany are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Myron Shultis and Mrs. Cornelia Taylor, at the "Old Homestead" farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Ransel Wager and son, Harold, of Clintondale spent Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Wager.

Mr. and Mrs. Mason Rose of Clintondale were callers on Mrs. Anna Miller and sons Tuesday evening.

A group of ladies, members of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Clintondale Methodist Church, associate pastorate of the Modena Methodist Church, held their annual picnic in the grove near Emory Conklin's place in Modena, Wednesday afternoon of the past week. An enjoyable time was reported.

Sleeping Sickness — What Is It?

Death Dealing Epidemic In Midwest Spurs Search For Cause, Mystery For Two Centuries

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
(Associated Press Science Editor.)

New York, (AP).—It is 221 years since the sleeping sickness, epidemic encephalitis, was first recorded; and 15 years since an almost world-wide search for its cause was begun.

But as doctors in St. Louis and vicinity watched the mounting death toll, the cause was still unknown, although guessed at. The general medical guess ascribes this infection to a non-filtrable virus, one of those living disease organisms too small to be caught in filters, or seen under microscopes. This "epidemic" sleeping sickness is not classed as the same illness which is spread by the bite of the tsetse fly.

Infection of Nervous System

The form now appearing in the midwest is due to infection in the central nervous system. The attack centers in various parts of the brain and of the brain coverings, the meninges, and of the spinal cord.

Stupor resembling sleep results and gives the illness its common name. The onset is sudden. Sometimes the lethargy is accompanied by distortion of vision, at others by delirium and terror. But the symptoms are likely to be widely different in different outbreaks. The cases in one epidemic may be mostly similar, only to vary with the next appearance.

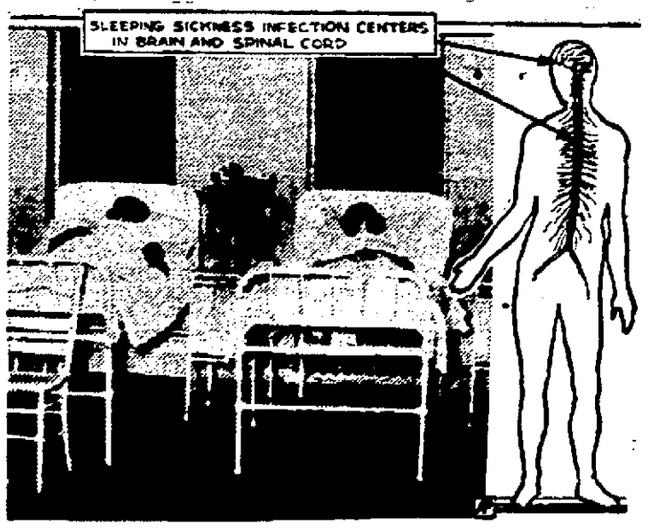

Means of Spread Vary

Equally erratic have been the evidences as to how the disease spreads. In 1920 among 400 cases in France there was not one record of personal contagion—or spread of the sickness from person to person. But in other epidemics there have been numerous examples of more than one person in the same family catching the infection. This suggests but does not prove personal contagion.

Rather startling was a history of 28 cases in Germany in 1926. For six of these were nursing sisters and two others attending physicians. Lapland had an epidemic in which from 7 to 45 per cent of the inhabitants of several stricken villages caught the disease.

Influenza Sometimes Precedes

Bad cases of influenza are known to have preceded a fair number of attacks of sleeping sickness. Likewise, but in lesser number, precursors have been noted in other diseases, particularly measles, varicelle and small-pox. Occasionally pneumonia and whooping cough have preceded sleeping sickness, and now and then vaccination.

Epidemic encephalitis — sleeping sickness — has exacted a heavy toll in the midwest. Three patients in a St. Louis hospital are among the many afflicted. The cause remains unknown.

Grahamsville Fair Expects Big Crowds

September 27 has been set as the date for the World's Fair at Grahamsville. This yearly one-day event has become one of the famous town fairs and attracts visitors from far and near. Continued for over half a century it is a recognized old home day and with nice weather will have an attendance of six or eight thousand people.

ARDONIA

Ardonia, Aug. 26—Mrs. Eber Palmer of this place had the honor of receiving the first premium for a quilt which she made all by hand. It was exhibited at the Ulster County Fair, in the state armory in Kingston. The work and design of the quilt were exquisite.

The Misses Bessie and Florence O'Neil of Gardiner are spending some time with Mrs. Orville Seymour in this place.

Mr and Mrs. Eugene Paltridge were business callers in Kingston Tuesday.

Franklyn Lozier of Savilton is spending some time at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Palmer and family.

Among the local residents who attended the Ulster county fair, in Kingston this week, were Miss Emma Palmer and guest, Miss Mabel Latta, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Paltridge, Miss Helen Palmer and Emmett Hyatt. Local members of the Plattekill Grange are very proud of the honor received when Plattekill Grange won first prizes on the Grange exhibit and also on the play, "Not Such a Goose", which was presented Wednesday evening. Seven Granges presented plays.

Mrs. Michael Mulvihill of Walden visited at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Hyatt, Thursday.

"Camp Sunset" sent out a fire alarm Wednesday morning for a chimney fire. Plattekill Fire Company responded. There was no damage.

Richard Barclay was a caller in Modena Wednesday.

Jones All Stars Defeat Royals, 6-5

Before a large turnout of baseball fans, Manager Harold Jones's All Stars successfully made their debut on the Athletic Field Friday evening, winning from the Brooklyn Royal Giants by the score of 6-5.

The Jones boys used three pitchers. Bill Thomas started on the mound and went four innings, allowing only one hit and an unearned run. Ted Fraleigh relieved him in the fifth. His control broke and he hit two batsmen and walked four in a row, giving the Royals three runs. Dewey Van Buren took up where Fraleigh left off in the sixth inning and held down the colored stars until the last of the seventh and final inning when they touched him for a double and triple to gain an extra run.

Featured batters for the Jones Stars were Johnny Carpenter and Charlie Tiano, each swatting the horsehide two out of four times. Carpenter registered a double and single, Tiano two doubles.

Circus Country Brown, besides scoring one of the runs for the negroes, kept the fans in laughter with his funny antics.

Next Tuesday evening at the Athletic Field, the Jones team will play the Black Yankees, one of the best colored attractions in the semi-pro ranks.

Tagging Major League Bases

By ORLO ROBERTSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

Back in the midst of the fray after being shut out four straight days by Jupiter Pluvius, the New York Giants have demonstrated they can manufacture a winning streak of their own to match the onrush of the Boston Braves.

Meeting the Pittsburgh Pirates in the first of the numerous doubleheaders which many experts have predicted will prove their downfall, the Giants twice turned back the Corsairs yesterday. They won the opening contest 8 to 5 as Manager Bill Terry cracked out a home run with two mates on base in the eleventh, and then behind the effective pitching of Leroy Parmelee crushed the Pirates 6 to 2 in the second game.

The double victory ran the Giants' winning streak to seven games and increased their margin over the idle Braves to seven games.

Freddy Lindstrom, finding the range in his old stamping grounds, clouted two homers in the first game but Mel Ott's 18th homer and Terry's 11th inning swat proved more effective. In the nightcap, the Giants jumped into an early lead when Ott hit his 19th homer and Johnny Vergez added another in the second inning. The double defeat dropped Pittsburgh into fifth place.

The Chicago Cubs strengthened their hold on third place by dividing a doubleheader with the Phillies. Philadelphia took the first game 8 to 7 in ten innings. The Cubs squared matters, however, with a 16-hit attack behind Lon Warneke in the nightcap, winning 7 to 4.

The Brooklyn Dodgers conquered the Cincinnati Reds twice by 4-3 scores as Hack Wilson made his major league debut at second base due to injuries to Brooklyn infielders. The Dodgers got only two hits off Silas Johnson in the second game but there were a home run by Wilson and a triple by Danny Taylor and proved sufficient, with the help of two passes and an error, to win.

The gap between Washington and New York in the American League widened to nine games with the Senators' 5 to 4 decision over the Detroit Tigers and the Cleveland Indians' 6 to 4 setback of the Yankees. The Senators' victory was their 16th in 18 games.

A three-run rally after two were out in the fourth and Joe Kuhel's home run in the fifth gave the Senators victory over their former teammate, Fred Marberry. Heinie Manush stretched his consecutive hitting streak to 33 games. The Indians came from behind with a five-run uprising, featured by Frank Pytlak's triple with two on, in the eighth to defeat the Yanks.

Bob Johnson hit two home runs, two singles and walked once to lead the Athletics to a 11 to 3 decision over the Browns. Gordon Rhodes pitched and batted the Red Sox to an 8 to 1 victory over the White Sox.

Kingston Netmen to Close Season With West Point Cadets

Kingston's Undefeated Racket Wielders Will Play Colorful Cadet Aggregation on September 9—Local Club Undefeated for Two Years.

Closing a brilliant season which has kept intact a string of victories during the past two years with no defeats, the Kingston Tennis Club has been signed to play its farewell contest of this season at West Point against the Cadet Tennis Team of the United States Military Academy on Saturday, September 9, according to an announcement made today from information received from First Lieutenant Raymond Stone, Jr., in charge of Cadet Tennis. Arrangements for the match were made by Robert Hancock, of the local tennis organization.

The Cadet racketmen are said to be a much improved organization over the group that pressed Kingston, which eked out a 5 to 4 victory last year, and Lieutenant Stone says of the coming contest: "We expect to extend you equally again this year, and perhaps slip one over on you. Come prepared to give us the works!"

The Kingston Tennis Club has not lost a victory in the last two seasons, being one of the few major sports organizations in the city which may boast of an unblemished record for so long a period. In the past season matches have been played with Newburgh Tennis Club, the Powelton Club of Newburgh, twice against Monroe, Woodstock and several minor warm-up affairs.

Members of the aggregation which will represent this city against the Cadets include Randall Rose, Stan Hancock, Edward Strong, Palmer Brodhead, Bon Joy and Robert Hancock.

The Kingston-Cadet tennis match is considered the high spot of the season, and it is expected that a number of friends of the players will make the journey to witness the contests, which are expected to be the hardest of the season for the local squad.

Two Helens Play for National Tennis Title

New York, Aug. 26 (AP).—For the eighth time since they left their high school class rooms out in California almost a decade ago to carve their careers in "big time" tennis, Mrs. Helen Wills Moody and Helen Jacobs faced each other across the net today, this time for the biggest prize of all the women's national championship.

Mrs. Moody, facing a familiar Forest Hills audience, was seeking her eighth national title, a mark that would tie the record set by Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory. Miss Jacobs, though defending the championship won a year ago, was in quest of her first victory over the statuesque Mrs. Moody, who qualified for the finals by beating Betty Nuthall.

Never has Miss Jacobs been able to beat her staunchest rival. She's never even won a set, so the odds today were all on Mrs. Moody's side, despite the ailing back that nearly kept her out of the tournament. In their only other clash for the championship, in 1928, Mrs. Moody was victorious, 6-2, 6-1. Mrs. Moody did not compete last year when Miss Jacobs finally captured the big cup.

Playing a steady, determined game, Miss Jacobs qualified for today's match by turning back Dorothy Round of England, 6-4, 5-7, 6-2, in yesterday's semi-final, delayed for four days by rain.

There was nothing very spectacular about Miss Jacobs' triumph over Miss Round, won in the face of a breeze that whipped the ball around and made all but the simplest shots a gamble. It bothered the British girl more than it did Helen, however. Miss Round's usually steady game was missing, her drives flying all over the premises and into the net throughout the match.

Record Entry for Fair Race Expected

A record entry list is expected for the auto races at the Dutchess County Fair on Friday, September 1. It will be remembered that last year there were 46 cars entered, which was the largest number of cars entered on any eastern dirt trackway. Ira Vail has 16 entries to date, with all of the leading drivers from the Woodbridge, N. J., speedway as well the drivers competing at Reading, Pa., Langhorn, etc. Bob Sall, the winner of last year's events, is holding out for a big guarantee, but it is expected that he will get together with the promotor before the entries close on August 26. Other such stars as Johnny Hannon, Joe Russo, Milt Marion, Verne Orendoff and many other drivers of Indianapolis fame will be among the men competing.

Inasmuch as the gate and grand stand admissions have been greatly reduced, a larger crowd than ever is expected.

Many of the drivers competing at the New York State Fair will stop off for the Rhinebeck races on their way to Syracuse, which races have been under the management of Ira Vail for the past eight years. This is the largest racing event in the east.

Savilton Scouts Win Game.

Plattekill, Aug. 26.—The Savilton Boy Scouts team defeated a team managed by Charles Everett of this place on the Savilton diamond, Friday evening, with a score of 6-1. Donald Weaver, Scoutmaster, tossed for his band, while Harold Mills, of the Grangers, pitched for the local nine.

SPORT SLANTS

By ALAN J. GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor.)

It seems to be one of the privileges of our Great Men in sports to be a trifle forgetful, if not inaccurate about the details.

Things about which some future may be made in the prints or the record books or among the fans do not seem to register any lasting memories with the performers themselves.

Ninety-nine out of every ten boxing fanatics who recall the Dempsey-Firpo fight, either by hearsay or as an eye-witness, dwell at much length on the "mighty blow" by which the Wild Bull flung our champion right out of the ring into the lap of Jack Lawrence, then on the staff of the New York Tribune.

But Dempsey will tell you, as he has told me, that the hardest blow he took in that fight was the very first punch that Firpo landed, a right to the jaw delivered as they rushed from their corners. In fact Dempsey says he saw at least three Firpos for the remainder of that hectic first round and on that basis he floored each of them 2 1-3 times.

Ruth's Memory Fails.

Most any small American addict of the national sport of baseball knows more about the details of the great G. Herman Ruth's clouting records than the genial Babe himself.

I put to him the same query that had been handed me: "Do you know how many homers you have hit off Lefty Grove or what pitcher you hit for the most homers altogether?"

He couldn't even make a guess. I told him the count was nine off Grove and, so far as I could locate, 14 each off George Dauss and Howard Ehmke, for the high mark off any flinger.

"What about that Walberg?" he countered. "I musta hit plenty off him. Why, I nicked him for seven one year, 1927, when I made the record."

At the moment we were in the Yankee dugout. Although skeptical I could not dispute the great man until I took another dive into the record books, finding that unless the official scorers had astigmatism Ruth collected only four homers off Walberg in 1927.

The Babe "Fixed Him."

There's a classic story told about the days when Ruth was a great left-handed pitcher for the Red Sox, mowing the enemy down with speed and rare control.

The Babe had instructions between innings to "dust off" one of the opposing batsmen expected to come up in the next inning. He was given the name and nodded in complete agreement and understanding.

As it happened this particular batsman was replaced but it didn't mean anything to Ruth. He followed orders anyway, "got his man" and then came in to the bench chuckling!

"Well, I guess I fixed so-and-so the way you told me, didn't I?"

City League Series Tilt This Afternoon

The second game of the City League series between the Morgan Repealers and the Schryver Lumbermen will be played at the Athletic Field this afternoon at 3:45 o'clock. A large crowd is expected to attend as it will be the deciding game if the Repealers win as they already have taken one game. Two wins out of three games decide the championship. Ted Fraleigh and Joie Hoffman will form the Repealers' battery. Ed Wilson and Jack Robins will do the battery work for the Lumbermen.

The loving cup, which will go to the winning team, is being displayed in the window of Sweeney & Schonger's clothing store.

Just Like Others

The lower Yukon natives greatly humor their children. The youngsters are not compelled to perform tasks and are given everything they cry for, according to a traveler in that region, who recounts that the teacher at one of the villages asked a native father why his son did not attend school. "Oh, he say he no feel like it," the father replied.

Old Bushkill Was on Rampage

West Shokan, Aug. 26.—The big summer flood of August 25, 1926, has been equalled and even excelled in this, one of the most devastating freshets in a generation.

The famous old Bushkill stream which drains the Watson Hollow watershed and its main tributary, the Wittenberg, which forms an outlet for the valleys of Maltby and Moonhaw, have at divers instances poured their murky floods over cobble paved beds since time immemorial. Their spectacular performances in carrying vast volumes of water which fell Wednesday night and Thursday morning was a scene witnessed by hundreds of sightseers Thursday from the Bushkill bridge. Beyond this point auto travel was possible Friday noon for some distance, at least toward Watson Hollow. From daylight until about 9 a. m., the water rose rapidly, carrying large trees down stream, undermining dockings and tearing out sections of roadway and bridge abutments.

During the height of the flood the road from Colange corner up to the Bushkill docking, a distance of a quarter mile, was under water, which has not happened previously in many years. Beyond the Bushkill twin concrete bridge north to the Traver Hollow Inn the water ran over the boulevard. The Watson Hollow road at either end of the concrete bridge over the Wittenberg stream is considerably damaged, and further up the hollow much road ruin is reported.

Where the flood broke through at the west end of the Bushkill bridge, the roadway is somewhat torn and part of the stone fill in the rear of the new concrete abutment wing put in after the 1928 flood is washed out. The bridge and abutments, however, held solid. The stretch of road to the Maple Dell house is all badly gullied. At this writing Friday morning a conservative estimate of the damage would be quite impossible but doubtless will run into thousands of dollars.

Wittenberg stream leading to the country estate of Dr. Henry L. Bibby was torn away, as was the plant bridge spanning Dry Brook approaching the residence of Clayton Burgher.

The flood broke its bounds beyond the west end of the Bushkill iron bridge and swept in a large volume over its course of a century or more ago down over the Maple Dell property floating from its foundations their sap house a distance of 100 feet or more with the loss of the evaporator and most of the pails and other sapping equipment. The Crane bungalows were surrounded beyond the bridge and Mr. and Mrs. Crane were forced to leave their home as the waters reached almost to the floor levels.

Deputy Sheriff Everett Roosa's place in the pines, near the docking below the bridge, was moved from its foundation and the porch washed away.

A fleet of state trucks is still marooned at Conservation Superintendent Ralph Crane's property on the Moonhaw road due to the washed out roadway.

At Traver Hollow the stream ran wild and rose to its highest point within the memory of Mrs. Martin J. Every, whose memory reverts back at least 60 years. Mr. Every's bridge, which stood some eight feet above the creek bed, was carried away. The bridge led to his wood lot and upper pasture fields and a few years ago was raised on account of threat of high water damage. Friday morning the west basin of the reservoir had risen to high levels. The fact that both the east and west basins had been drawn down considerably has saved the lower Esopus section from a repetition of the flooded conditions of last May. High tide of the Esopus at Cold Brook lapped the very ties of the railroad bed.

Westminster Abbey Known as the Royal Cemetery

The site of Westminster abbey has been occupied by a church for more than thirteen centuries. The beginnings of the present abbey, however, date to the reign of Edward the Confessor, who had a palace at Westminster, and who, between 1049 and 1065 built a church here, dedicated to St. Peter. From this circumstance comes the present official name of Westminster abbey—the Collegiate Church of St. Peter.

Edward the Confessor, who died in 1066, was the first monarch to be buried there, and his shrine, erected by Henry III, is one of the most celebrated there.

Since Edward's time the abbey has been several times reconstructed, restored and enlarged, some of this work having been done as recently as 1890.

In Westminster abbey lie buried thirteen kings and five sovereign queens, besides the consorts and descendants of kings.

Rare Murals Under Whitewash

Valuable mural paintings dating back to the Fourteenth century have been discovered under coats of whitewash on the walls of Burton Latimer church, near Kettering, England. They belong to the best period of mural English painting and experts believe them to be works of a great master.

Bulgaria Speeds Up

Pig for Sale in a Sofia Street.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

BETWEEN the Danube and the Macedonian mountains the traveler sees hardly a single farmhouse; yet "Bulgar" means a man with a plow, and four of every five Bulgarians are farmers. Sofia, founded by Trajan, just missed becoming Constantinople, since Constantine seriously considered it as his capital. Still a small town in 1880, it is now a flourishing city of a quarter of a million inhabitants, the progressive capital of a land of villages.

Although, since hoary antiquity, tidal waves of humanity have swept south through the Balkan passes or east and west along the route to Byzantium, this cross-roads country is still far from the beaten path.

Yet the Orient express passes through Sofia every day, and on the Orient Arrow it is a day's flight from Paris, whose styles it has begun to copy. Before daylight you don the seventy-league boots awaiting you at Le Bourget, airport of Paris; touch earth at Strasbourg, Nurnberg, Prague, Vienna, Budapest and Belgrade, and end the day in your sixth European capital.

Despite the increase in numbers of city dwellers, seeking to buy amusement in the open market, scanning movie posters and photographs of sleek cabaret girls, Bulgaria is an agricultural land, with peasant conservatism and thrift. Among the more or less formal Thanksgiving proclamations of recent times, surely one of the most arresting was Bulgaria's "Our poverty is our riches." A land of homespun may be proof against not only spiritual but also economic depression.

Were one to seek a symbol for economics and spiritual stability, the Bulgarian woman, plying her distaff as she leads meek-eyed oxen through bucolic scenes worthy of a Rose Bonheur, might well serve as a model. But even the Bulgarian Maud Miller has "glanced to the far-off town."

Going Ahead Rapidly.

The rural Bulgarians, whose riches are poverty, are awaking to new desires. Bulgarians have long fostered schools, literature, music, and the drama. But "progress" now means something different—not a lifting up, but a speeding up. City styles and pleasures are stealing the spotlight. An old Bulgarian proverb says, "Easier to start the piper than to stop him," and Bulgaria has begun to tread a faster measure than ox-team or buffalo have set or can follow.

One finds in Bulgaria many graduates of Constantinople Woman's college, and of Robert college in Istanbul. There are also several excellent American schools in Bulgaria itself. American educators have approached the problems of Bulgaria with sympathetic understanding. The boys' and girls' schools of Samokov have been united to form a co-educational American college; but, in deference to Bulgarian conservatism, an imaginary line, cutting the campus in two, still separates the sexes.

In Pordim there is a more unusual school with a one-year course designed for dirt farmers, who there learn to do by doing. Future mothers practice on real babies before having babies of their own. Even in a land where veterinary schools and hospitals rival those for human beings, there is no other institution quite like the American farm school, which gains prestige from its American patronage.

Tirnovo, former capital at a time when defense was more than trade routes, straddles a neck of land tunneled by the railway and rises above wild mid-city gorges as does Luxembourg. On the Mount of Eagles stands the city of today, linked by a narrow isthmus with the Hill of the Tsars, walled region of the former royal palaces. A colony of monasteries occupies another hilltop and the aristocrats a fourth.

Varna Becomes a Summer Resort.

Varna, on the Black sea, used to be a grain port, but when the boundary makers gave the rich granary of the Dobruja to Rumania the city lost its commercial importance. When wheat failed, little drops of water and little grains of sand did their bit. On the splendid sea front, commodious bathhouses and seaside villas were built, and summer visitors now flock in from all over central Europe to revel in sea and sun.

For a time the authorities tried to reserve the central section for married folks; but they persisted in forgetting to bring their marriage licenses, and mixed bathing is now firmly established. On the wings are screened sections where men and women are isolated and can dispense with suits, lie in the hot sand and let Old Sol shoot health into them through every pore.

Deprived of Dobrudja's bread, Varna decided to eat cake; and vacationers in increasing numbers share and provide the fun. Hotels claim to offer Bulgarian, Hungarian, Bohemian, and German cooking, but French habits are not yet understood. In Bulgaria one eats chocolate but drinks cocoa.

South of Varna is Mesemvriya, where Byzantine emperors used to disport themselves in the Euxine. From the sands many antique treasures have been rescued, and there still exist imposing ruins of Byzantine churches.

Military service is not obligatory in Bulgaria, though it is expedient; but, in addition to the few days of temporary labor which male subjects are supposed to render to their country, every eighteen-year-old does eight months of obligatory labor under what resembles military discipline.

Lands are reclaimed, roads and bridges built, railways repaired, eroding mountain sides reforested, rampant rivers tamed, relief shelters constructed, and good citizenship learned by these organized laborers, or trudovaks. Their badge reads, "Work for Bulgaria." This labor corps is one of the most distinctive features of modern Bulgarian life.

Protective tariff walls always look lower from the inside, and in Bulgaria, as elsewhere, a heightened nationalism jealously guards its infant industries. To its fine woolens the country has already added sugar, cotton cloth, silks, flour, baby carriages, bicycles, hides, paper, cigarettes, rubber shoes, and even automobile tires. Although cereals, tobacco, eggs, and chickens are among the principal exports, Bulgaria's most distinctive product is attar of roses, of which it produces three-fourths of the world's supply.

Rose Industry Important.

Jahangir, the Mogul emperor, amused Nur Jahan by piping rose water through her garden at Delhi, and upon its surface she first discovered the bright pearls of attar. Later an old Turk, seeing the wild roses of Bulgaria, induced his compatriots to start the industry which won for the plain between the Balkans and the Middle Mountain the name of "The Rose Valley."

The rose, as symbol of beauty, innocence and modesty, has inspired countless legends and songs ever since it was born with Aphrodite from the sea foam or sprang from Rosalie's wound, inflicted by the chaste but intolerant Diana. But one doesn't use perfume to prove innocence, and a rose smells even sweeter under many strange names. Attar of roses is used as a base and fixative rather than for its scent alone, and the skilled perfumer determines whether this product of peasants shall suggest floppy-brimmed hats and flowered chiffon or sleek silks and exotic earrings.

These unspoiled Bulgarian peasants, who never knew luxury, depend on it for their daily bread, and although they know no political economy, it affects both their economies and their politics. Because of the competition between private and co-operative distillers, rose oil has come to involve bankers and politicians as well as gardeners. The old firms are not only finding a decreased sale, but are also facing the competition of co-operative distilleries opened under government protection and boom conditions.

The attar of roses produced by the co-operatives is deposited as collateral in the Agricultural bank, which, although already holding a thousand pounds or so of attar, must still advance funds on the new crop.

"JUST ANOTHER THING TO GET TO WORK ON"

"SOME day he'll be able to do almost everything again—except play the piano."

A doctor said that to the heart-broken mother whose son had had to undergo amputation of eight fingers and a thumb. He had been held up one winter night, robbed, beaten, and left unconscious, in zero weather, in the snow. His nine fingers were the price of the exposure. And the musical instrument which he loved to play.

That was three years ago. The other day the same young man—his name is Arthur Williamson and he lives in Philadelphia—gave a piano recital before an enthusiastic gathering of people. With fingers removed from the second joint, he is reported to have "raced across the keyboard in the most complex arpeggios with the nine stumps and one damaged thumb on his left hand." He has appeared as guest artist on the radio. And he plays two other instruments, the trombone and xylophone.

Just another chapter, or merely another page in that fascinating story that is a record of human conquest over disability and handicap. A mother whose child in a desperate illness lost her hearing, said to me: "At first I was completely floored—overwhelmed; I thought her life was finished. Then I was shown how other children had overcome this handicap by lip reading, and I realized it was just another thing to get to work on. Today my daughter enjoys full self-expression, usefulness and happiness."

"Just another thing to get to work on"—you mothers who find yourself up against a handicap—think of the boy who lost nine fingers, but has managed to play the piano!

Trees and shrubs were uprooted from the ferocity of the gales of wind, and motorists were few on the slippery roads.

JERRY FOLLOWS HIS OLD PLAN

PETER RABBIT and Hooty the Owl were not the only ones interested in the building of Jerry Muskrat's new house. Oh, my, no. Every one around the Smiling Pool was interested. It was very much the same as it would be if a new house were being built near where you live. You know how interested in that house every single neighbor would be.

Just so at the Smiling Pool there was a great deal of interest in what Jerry was doing. Grandfather Frog was interested. Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter were interested. Redwing the Blackbird was interested. Spotty the Turtle was interested. You see it gave them something to think about and talk about and criticize. So they spent a great deal of time watching Jerry work, and giving him advice which he didn't ask for and didn't heed.

"Chug-a-rum!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog abruptly from the big green lilypad on which he was sitting. "Chug-a-rum! I suppose, Jerry Muskrat, you will build a finer house than you had before."

"I hope it will be a little better," replied Jerry modestly. "I ought to be able to build it a little better after what I learned in building the first one. Anyway it will be safer, because it will not be in danger of being swept away if there should be a flood next spring. I will make it a little larger than the old one and the foundations will be broader."

"I suppose that means that you will have more rooms in it," said Grandfather Frog, rolling his big goggly eyes so as to stare at Jerry.

"More room but not more rooms," replied Jerry. "I shall follow the same plan as the old one was built on."

"Huh!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog. "Huh! I should think that while you are about it you would try to improve on that old plan and have something really new. I would if I were foolish enough to waste a lot of good time in hard work building a house. I'm thankful I don't have need of a house, but if I did and had to build a new one I certainly would try to make it enough different from the old one to know that I really had a new one. What's your idea in making it just like the old one?"

"As I've already told you, it won't be just like the old one; it will be bigger and better," replied Jerry with considerable dignity. "It will simply be on the same plan as the old one because that plan just exactly suits me, just as it suited my father and my grandfather and great-grandfather and my—"

"Hold on!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog hastily. "You don't need to go back in your family history to the days when the world was young; I know all about it. Some people are set in their ways. They certainly are set in their ways. Because your grandfather-a-thousand-times-removed did a certain thing in a certain way is no reason that you should do that same thing in exactly that same way."

"Ho!" cried Jerry Muskrat. "Ho! That is queer talk from you, Grandfather Frog! That certainly is queer talk from you, who are living today just as your grandfathers way back in the beginning of things lived. I hope I have sense enough to know that when I have a thing which exactly suits me it would be worse than foolish to try to change it. Here comes Redtail the Hawk!"

"Chug-a-rum!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog and dived headlong into the Smiling Pool. Jerry grinned and then quietly sank from sight himself.

"Don't Do That Again," Says Life Saver

FIVE-year-old Suzanne Evans of Wynnewood, Pa., is here admonishing William Kuehne, three years old, after rescuing him from drowning in Indian creek. The boy had waded out beyond his depth and was unconscious when Suzanne went after him and succeeded in dragging him to the bank, and then ran for help. It seems as if Suzanne rates a Carnegie medal.

WEST SHOKAN

West Shokan, Aug. 26.—Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Smith of Roselle, N. J., accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Florence Warren, also of Roselle, all of whom are well-known locally, arrived Wednesday in order to be present at the annual home fair and supper and spend the remainder of the week.

The Rev. and Mrs. Carl F. Ahrens, daughter, Grace, also his sister, Miss Ahrens, all of Walden, were entertained over night Wednesday, after the Baptist fair which they attended, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Jones in West Shokan Heights.

Frank Whittier of Tuckaway Farm is spending the week at his permanent home in Port Washington, Long Island, where he is employed as a master painter.

Among well-known out-of-town folks present Wednesday evening at the local church festival were Undertaker Howard Humiston and Jesse B. Boice of Kerhonkson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. West and Mrs. Hinkley of Allaben, Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Roosa and daughter, Katherine, of Kingston, and numerous others.

Mrs. John Marshall of Olive Bridge, charming mistress of the town clerk's office, is reported feeling somewhat indisposed at this writing due to a reaction brought about by the long continued dismal rainy weather. Mrs. Marshall's many friends trust that soon she will be her smiling, kindly self again. These summer colds hit heavy at times.

Philip Dwyer has been suffering from a very severe summer cold of late, necessitating a call from the family medico, Dr. William Bush of Kingston.

The reservoir is at flood tide again but little wonder considering the streams which are still pouring in their contents.

Mrs. Ole Bell of Brodhead Heights was employed by Mrs. Watson Bishop at West Shokan Heights Friday.

Clarence Palen of Kingston came up Thursday morning to ascertain first hand whether or not the old home at the forks of the Maltby and Watson Hollow roads had floated down to the reservoir.

When Africans Quarrel

If a Mweithaga of Africa goes to another village and becomes embroiled in a quarrel with a member of another tribe, goats must be exchanged to make the peace, and the aggressor must spit on the other party to obviate the "evil eye."

Where Britain Doesn't Rule

The Indian states, covering more than one-third of India and comprising almost one-fourth of its population, are not under British administration.

Howe About:

Politicians Germany A Near Masterpiece

By ED HOWE

I HAVE been reading another old book telling of the days when kings were supreme. With a few courtiers distributed in various parts of the country, the old king not only owned the land, but the farmers cultivating it: If an autocrat, while out hunting, saw a pretty farm girl, he took her home with him. Once the autocrats engaged in war for thirty successive years, and few of the country people escaped becoming cannon fodder and fertilizer.

While very indignant because of the manner in which country people (my class) were once treated, a friend called, and I expressed surprise that in any age the people, always in the majority, submitted to such indignity. The caller, a lawyer, replied that the politicians of today rule the people more absolutely than did the kings of olden time. Our modern taxes, he said, are on a scale of extravagance the old autocrats never dreamed of.

The submission of the people now, the lawyer said, is more surprising than the submission of old, since we moderns have had the benefit of centuries of teaching of the relief to be obtained by revolution.

Conscription of men for military service in foreign wars is still in effect. Lately there has been brave talk among students and labor union men that they will not submit again as tamely as they did to the draft edict of King Woodrow Wilson, but, said my caller, the politicians have agents and accomplices distributed in almost every family, and the people of today are more helpless than were the people of old.

Like the Russians (said my caller, as he departed to spread poison elsewhere), we were given farms, but lately these have been taken from us by the politicians.

Germany seems determined to abandon its new republican form of government, and re-establish the old monarchy. Everything creditable in German history—and there is a great deal—dates from the days of its different kings, emperors and kaisers: everything discreditable must be charged to the reign of its Presidents since the last monarch was chased into Holland. Here is another idea I offer the sane for what it is worth: In the serious thinking we are now doing because of the numerous monkey wrenches thrown into our machinery, the words "republic" and "democracy" should be examined with more care. The Englishman known as Lord Macaulay I have long regarded as a more intelligent man than Gladstone, Shakespeare, or half a dozen others near the top in the English hall of fame. Many years ago he predicted the failure of democracy in the United States, because of the politicians. Our present condition is so much like the catastrophe he predicted that an intelligent American cannot read it without shame. I do not say monarchy is the remedy, but I do say democracy is not the final word in government.

I have lately read a "story" by a woman entitled: "South Moon Under." It is a little dirty in spots; otherwise I should proclaim it a masterpiece equal to the best country tales of the Scandinavians or Russians. The book is issued by Scribner; why this dignified publisher did not coax the woman to cut out the filth which weakens it, I cannot understand. Without it, "South Moon Under" would have had a life of hundreds of years. The story concerns the poorest of the Florida natives, and Pearl Buck's stories of Chinese farmers do not come anywhere near equaling it. I read it with delight at a sitting, but always regretting the author occasionally uses words in her book she certainly never uses in her conversation. Here is the best example of American realism in years almost ruined.

I am a quiet man, and not much disposed to "run around," but confess to being disturbed by the fate of that quiet man whose home and family were recently wiped out by a falling airplane.

Altogether the deaths numbered 15 (not many are wounded in airplane accidents).

The machine was tri-motored; that is, it had three separate engines. It has been claimed by the advocates of progress that if two of the three engines in such a machine should fail, the pilot could safely land with one. Three such machines fell with almost equal loss of life within as many days.

One of them was carrying a basketball team hurrying to another game. Shall we keep up the speed and slaughter, or should we slow down to the safety now being recommended by God Almighty in everything else?

More nonsense is written about what is called the mind than about anything else.

* * *

Silerius said in his memoirs he was a hard fighter for his rights with women, and that he regarded such activity as proper duty. "I have known men who were too patient minds with wives," he wrote, "and thus retarded their advance as citizens. The association of men and women is warfare, and a husband should be a good soldier both in commanding and in obeying."

Action of Icebergs

Icebergs begin their work by pushing and grinding their way to the sea as glaciers, and in their course they pick up large quantities of rocks, gravel, sand and still finer materials. When they reach the ocean, and the waves raise and break them loose, they go to sea to scatter their load over the ocean's bottom, to add their contribution to future lands.
